

Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.

Some Features of Women's Stories of Self and Separation

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Philosophy in Linguistics at Massey University

Alison Schmidt
1999

Abstract

Since the 1950s an increasingly significant strand of stress and trauma research has been research into separation and divorce. Approaches to separation by researchers in different fields, including sociology (e.g. Orbuch 1992), psychology (eg. White, 1991) and linguistics (e.g. Potter and Wetherall, 1987), all show the evolution of post-modern philosophical trends. The overlap between these fields has increased as the social constructionist theory of language has gained prevalence. In social constructionist theory, our thought and the organization of our society are products of the language with which we think and organize ourselves. The concepts and values and beliefs of society are implicit in the language available to the individual to interpret his/her own experiences. Research into people's responses to, and interpretations of, their experiences of change has focused increasingly on the language that people actually use in natural communicative contexts, and the accounts that they develop to account for what has happened.

This research explores the language used by a group of separated women to account for their separations. The theoretical orientation of the research is social constructionist. The main analytic concept that guides the research is the notion of interpretive repertoires. These are the words and images used by a group of speakers within a society, in relation to specific issues, that invoke the global patterns of understanding of the world that inform the speaker's interpretation of those issues.

The research has four main aims. It sets out to identify the characteristics of women's experience of transition, which is their psychological reorientation in response to change. It explores the mechanics and strategies by which women adjust to their separations and the adjustment differences between "dumpers" and "dumpees" and between "newly separated" and "formerly married women". It investigates the ways in which women validate themselves and their stories both by presenting witnesses and the evidence of spokespersons for our society, and by invoking selected discourses of our society.

The research shows internal consistency between women's perceptions of a woman's nature and their interpretations of women's roles, and it shows the conflict between the perceived nature and roles of a woman and the discourse of self-actualization.

Preface & Acknowledgments

This thesis was written in the laundry of a rented cottage in Te Awanga in 1999, in the only available space between the washing machine and deep freeze. Thanks to Wendy Gordon, who lent me her late grandmother's heater, I didn't freeze during the winter.

My own separation story inspired me to undertake the project and of course, influenced my perceptions and analysis of other women's stories. What I noticed first and foremost about the data were those themes that resonated with the themes of my own story. Writing this thesis has served me in several therapeutic ways. It provided a vehicle and framework for obsessively reviewing and adjusting to my own separation, it provided a means of meeting and talking to other separated women about separation, and it helped me to withstand the shifting sands of transition, by giving me a purpose and keeping me far too busy to fall apart.

Above all I would like to thank the five participants of the project. I have lived intimately with their intimate stories and I feel very connected to them. I thank them most sincerely for their trust, openness and enthusiasm for the project.

Thanks also to the many women, my friends and colleagues, who were engaged in the project in different ways. Tania Pattison supported the project as transcriber and technician and I thank her for her excellent work. Thanks too, to Sue Chapman who lent me her dictaphone, even though she thought I should get my own.

Finally, special thanks to my supervisor, Dr. Margaret Franken, who encouraged and advised me and kept me on track.

Contents
Chapter 1 Introduction	1
Chapter 2 Social Constructionism	4
• Modernism and Postmodernism	4
• Self Construction	4
• The Formative Force Of Language	5
• The Discourses Of Our Time	5
• Warranting Voice	6
• Exercising Power	7
• Positioning	7
• Role Theory	8
• Summary	9
Chapter 3 Personal Narratives	10
• Storytelling	10
• Self Presentation	10
• Features Of Personal Narratives	11
• Story Genre	12
• Narratives As Social Interactions	12
• World View	13
• Therapeutic Functions Of Personal Narratives	13
• Summary	15
Chapter 4 Change and Transition	16
• Obsessive Review	16
• The Conservative Impulse	16
• Conviction	17
• Ambivalence	17
• Anxiety	18
• Completion Tendency	18
• Beliefs	19
• Summary	19
Chapter 5 Separation and Adjustment	20
• Adaptive Strategies	20
• Identity Change	20
• The Interpersonal Orientation Of Women	21
• Uncoupling	22
• Adjustment	23
• Dumpees	24
• Dumpers	25
• Other Circumstances Of The Separation	25
• Summary	26

Chapter 6 Narratives of Separation	27
• The Functions Of Separation Stories	27
• The Scope Of The Story	28
• Emotions	29
• Social Context	29
• “The Individual”	29
• “Romantic Love”	30
• “The Companionate Marriage”	30
• Closure	31
• Summary	31
Chapter 7 Summary of Previous research	32
Chapter 8 The Scope Of This Research.	35
• The Common Characteristics Of Transition	35
• Evidence Of Adjustment To Change	36
• Evidence Of Selected Discourses Of Our Society	38
• The Use of Validation Strategies	40
• Summary	40
Chapter 9 Method	41
• The Participants	41
• Main Groups In The Sample	41
• Making Contact with Newly Separated Women	41
• Making Contact with Formerly Married Women	42
• Other Variables in the Sample Group	42
• Level of Education	42
• Dumpers and Dumpees	42
• Other Variables	43
• Self Selectors	43
• Brief Introduction to the Participants	44
• Procedures for Recruiting Participants and Obtaining Informed Consent	45
• Advertising	45
• The Preliminary Meeting	45
• Data Collection Procedures	47
• The Questionnaire	47
• Design of the Questionnaire	47
• Purposes of the Questionnaire	49
• The Interview	49
• Venue	49
• The Interview Guide	49
• Interview Structure and Style	51
• Ethical Concerns	52
• Counselling Back up	52
• Confidentiality	53

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Processing the data 53 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Discourse analysis 53 • Categories of analysis 54 • Coding 54 • Method of analysis 54 • Transcribing conventions 55 • Consultation 57 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Consultation with friends and colleagues 57 • Consultation with the participants 57
Chapter 10 The Common Characteristics of Transition	59
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Unreal City 59 • Dis-Ease 59 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Illness 60 • Anxiety 61 • Homelessness 66 • Disconnection 69 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Loss of self 69 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Unfamiliar Self 69 • Split self 70 • Metaphors of Unreal self 72 • Loss of Control 78 • Ambivalence 82 • Summary 84
Chapter 11 Evidence of Adjustment	86
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Letting go 86 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Emotive 86 • Cognitive 88 • Constructing the future 90 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Orientation to the future 90 • Changing the environment 93 • Changing self-image 95 • Summary 98
Chapter 12 Evidence of selected discourses of our Society	100
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Self Actualization 100 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Self Development 102 • Health and well being 104 • Self government 105 • Personal goals 105 • Metaphors of self actualization 105 • A woman's nature 107 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Need for Support 107 • The path of least resistance 112 • Empathy/ Connectedness 114

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The role of a wife <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Support • Compliance • A mother's role <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Be there for others • Provide a real family • Keep the family together • Summary 	117 117 120 123 124 124 126 128
Chapter 13 Evidence of the use of selected validation strategies	129
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Quoting others • Providing Witnesses • Summary 	129 136 140
Chapter 14 Conclusion	141
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Transition <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Implications for supporters and support groups • Adjustment <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Implications for supporters and support groups • Discourses • Validation strategies • Method 	141 143 145 147 148 149 150
Bibliography	153
Appendices	159

List of Tables and Figures

		Page
Figure 1	A brief introduction to the participants	45
Figure 2	Design to the questionnaire	48
Figure 3	Transcribing Conventions	55
Figure 4	Model of the characteristics of Transition	85
Figure 5	Model of Adjustment	99
Figure 6	Model of the participants' view of a woman's nature	117
Figure 7	Model showing correspondence between the participants' view of a woman's nature and their view of the roles of a wife and mother.	128

List of Appendices

Appendix 1	Notice Information Sheet
Appendix 2	Questionnaire Consent form Interview confirmation slip
Appendix 3	Summary of Steps in the procedure
Appendix 4	Confidentiality Agreement
Appendix 5	Categories of Analysis
Appendix 6	Sample section of tabulated results	