Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Female Authors and their Male Detectives:

The ideological contest in female-authored crime fiction

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Arts

in English

at Massey University, Palmerston North,

New Zealand

Robert Stanley Redmond

2008
Abstract

In the nineteen-eighties a host of female detectives appeared in crime fiction authored by women. Ostensibly these detectives challenged hegemonic norms, but the consensus of opinion was that their appropriation of male values and adherence to conventional generic closures colluded with a gender system of male privilege. Academic interest in the work of female authors featuring male detectives was limited. Yet it can be argued that these texts could have the potential to disrupt the hegemonic order through the introduction, whether deliberately, or inadvertently, of a female counterpoint to the hegemony.

The hypothesis I am advancing claims that the reconfiguration of male detectives in works authored by women avoids the visible contradictions of gender and genre that are characteristic of works featuring female detectives. However, through their use of disruptive performatives, these works allow scope for challenging normal gender practices—without damage to the genre. This hypothesis is tested by applying the performative theories of Judith Butler to a close reading of selected crime novels. Influenced by the theories of Austin, Lacan and Althusser, Butler’s concept of performativity claims that hegemonic notions of gender are a fiction. This discussion also uses Wayne Booth’s concept of the implied author as a means of distinguishing the performative agency of the text from that of the characters.

Agatha Christie, P.D. James, and Donna Leon, each with their male detective heroes, come from different generations. A Butlerian reading illustrates their potential for disrupting gender norms. Of the three, however, only Donna Leon avoids the return to hegemonic control that is a feature of the genre. Christie’s women who have agency are inevitably eliminated, while conformist women are rewarded. James’s lead female character is never fully at ease in her professional role. When thrust into a leadership role she proves herself to be competent, but not ready or desirous of the senior position. Instead her role is to mediate the transition of her junior, a male, to that position. Donna Leon is different. The moral and emotional content of her narratives suggests an implied author committed to ideological change. Her characters simultaneously renounce and collude with illusions of patriarchal authority, and could lay claim to be models for Butler’s notion of performative resistance.
Acknowledgements

Heartfelt thanks to Doreen D’Cruz my supervisor throughout this project. She was unfailingly helpful and constructive; her encouragement and quick response to my many queries was distance learning at its best. If every supervisor is as good as her, we extramural students enjoy a privileged position.

To my wife Anne who took up the slack while I pursued my obsession.

Thanks also to my daughter Sarah, whose enthusiasm for my endeavour and help with the complexities of computer formatting was both practical and morale boosting.

Thanks, too, to my daughter Catherine, who in the midst of her very busy schedule found time to proof read my efforts.
Table of Contents

Abstract ........................................................................................................................................... i
Acknowledgements ........................................................................................................................ iii
Abbreviations .................................................................................................................................... v

Chapter 1 ........................................................................................................................................... 1
  FEMALE-AUTHORED CRIME AND PERFORMATIVITY ................................................................. 1
  THE MALE DETECTIVES .................................................................................................................. 5
  THE NEW GIRLS .............................................................................................................................. 7
  GENDER AND PERFORMATIVITY ................................................................................................. 11
  VALIDATING PATRIARCHAL POWER .............................................................................................. 18
  SUBVERSION: WORK IN PROGRESS .............................................................................................. 22

Chapter 2 ......................................................................................................................................... 26
  AGATHA CHRISTIE AND HERCULE POIROT .................................................................................. 26
  THE FATAL TRIANGLE .................................................................................................................... 29
  THE BELGIAN GENT ....................................................................................................................... 32
  NEUTRALISING DANGEROUS WOMEN ....................................................................................... 38
  MARRIAGE AND SOCIAL ORDER ................................................................................................. 45
  CLOSURE ....................................................................................................................................... 48

Chapter 3 ......................................................................................................................................... 51
  P D JAMES AND ADAM DALGLEISH ............................................................................................. 51
  PATRIARCHAL MODELS ................................................................................................................... 52
  GENDER PROCESSES ..................................................................................................................... 55
  “HAVING” OR “BEING” THE PHALLUS ......................................................................................... 59
  EMMA LAVENHAM .......................................................................................................................... 69
  NARRATIVE CLOSURE ..................................................................................................................... 73
  CONCLUSION ................................................................................................................................. 74

Chapter 4 ......................................................................................................................................... 76
  DONNA LEON AND GUIDO BRUNETTI .......................................................................................... 76
  VENICE AND PERVERSIVE GRAFT ............................................................................................... 77
  PAOLA ............................................................................................................................................ 79
  SIGNORINA ELETTRA AND MASQUERADE ................................................................................. 81
  AN HONEST MAN ............................................................................................................................... 88
  FRAGILE IDENTITIES ...................................................................................................................... 90
  CLOSURE AND DOTTORE MORO ................................................................................................. 94
  DONNA LEON ............................................................................................................................... 99

Chapter 5 ......................................................................................................................................... 101
  CONCLUSIONS .............................................................................................................................. 101

Works Cited .................................................................................................................................... 106
Works Consulted ........................................................................................................................... 109
Abbreviations

BFS    Blood from a Stone
BTM    Bodies that Matter
DE     Doctored Evidence
GT     Gender Trouble
WB     Wilful Behaviour