Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
A STUDY OF THE EFFECTS OF CHANGING COMMUNITY LIFE ON CHILD-REARING PATTERNS IN A SMALL, RURAL, MAORI COMMUNITY.

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for degree of Master of Arts in Social Anthropology at Massey University.

FOR Reference Only
NOT TO BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

Julia Te Urikore Taiapa
1980
CONTENTS

Lists of Figures and Tables

Introduction

PART ONE

1. HISTORY AND LOCATION
   Location
   Hicks Bay's Relationship with Te-Whanau-a-Apanui
   The Hicks Bay Community
   Hicks Bay's Beginnings
   Ruawaipu - Ngai-Tuere Alliance
   The Story of Tuwhakairiora
   The Comming of the Pakeha
   Missionaries and Religion
   The Ringatu Church
   Tohunga
   Education
   References for Chapter One

2. KINSHIP AND DESCENT IN HICKS BAY
   Ngati Ruawaipu
   Nga Oho and Ngai Tuere
   Whakapapa or Genealogical Charters
   Choice of Affiliation
   References for Chapter Two

3. COMMUNITY AND FAMILY
   Marae
   Hinemaurea Marae Committee
   Extensions of Hinemaurea Marae Committee
   Maori Womens Welfare League
   Patangata Youth Club Family
   Leadership
   Ceremonial Leadership
   Internal Leadership of the Family
   Administrative Leadership
   Manual Leadership
   References for Chapter Three
4. ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITIES AND CONSTRAINTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A Changing Economy</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sheep Farming and the Freezing Works in Hicks Bay</td>
<td>48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Developments in Dairy Farming</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dairying in Hicks Bay</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Situation Today</td>
<td>53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Household Organisation</td>
<td>53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Household Earnings</td>
<td>57</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Social Security</td>
<td>57</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sheep Farming</td>
<td>58</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wage Earning</td>
<td>58</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Summary</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>References for Chapter Four</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

PART TWO: SOCIALISATION AND CHANGE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Theories of Socialisation</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former Practices in Hicks Bay</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Present Day Practices in Hicks Bay</td>
<td>64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Practices Among Migrant Hicks Bay Families</td>
<td>66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>67</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>71</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
List of Figures

1. Genealogical charter showing Hicks Bays Links with Te-Whanau-a-Apanui. 3
2. Genealogy showing Tuwhakairiora’s links with Porourangi - founder of Ngati Porou. 7
3. Genealogy showing strong links between Ngai-Tuere and Ruawaipu. 9
4. Linear links between the Hicks Bay hapu, and seven canoes of the Great Fleet. 20
5. Genealogy showing descent of Ruawaipu from Toi-Kairakau. 24
6. Genealogy showing major Ngati Porou hapu and leading figures in the history and conquest of the Hicks Bay hapu. 26
7. Genealogy showing the writer’s descent from Tuwhakairiora and Ruataupare. 29
8. Diagram of the bilateral extended family descent category. 40

List of Tables

1. Size of community households in 1939. 55
2. Size of community households in 1980. 56

List of Maps

1. Map showing Hicks Bay location on the East Coast. 5
INTRODUCTION

Given the fact that change is an inevitable process in all societies, the aim of this thesis is to show the connection between social change and child-rearing practices in a small Maori community.

The study is concerned with social change within New Zealand society, particularly amongst the Maori population of Hicks Bay and the effects of this on the family unit. Although the particular concern was with the influence of the mother-figure on the socialisation process and adaptability of the child, circumstances prevented the full inclusion of this latter part of the study within this thesis. However, a brief outline of these issues and their relevance to the particular Hicks Bay community is included.

A sociological approach is adopted in parts of this study primarily from an anthropological perspective. Social Anthropology examines the different kinds of relationships within a society with particular emphasis on aspects of the culture that are common to other cultures; the institutionalized aspects of the society and the ideas and values that are associated with it.

In this study, the influence of these factors on the social organisation of Hicks Bay is examined and the particular consequences of the socialisation process are described.

Psychological studies on aspects of Maori family life such as those written by James and Jane Ritchie (1957) and Pearl and Ernest Beaglehole (1946) have produced valuable information and stimulating insights relevant to this study. Some of the short stories and novels written by such Maori authors as Witi Ihimaera and Patricia Grace, and biographical accounts of the lives of Maori elders (e.g. 'Amiria' by A. Salmond) have also provided an invaluable complement and corrective to previous research studies which, when based on a European theoretical framework, have sometimes ignored or misinterpreted certain features of Maori family life. Ethnographic accounts of Maori communities, particularly those by Hugh Kawharu on Orakei, Patrick

1. The term European is used to denote New Zealanders of European stock.
Hohepa on Waima and James and Jane Ritchie on Rakau, have had an important influence on the shaping of this study.

At the level of analysis, a number of theoretical essays, notably those by Raymond Firth, Philip Mayer and Roger Keesing, have provided anthropological theories and models on which to base this study.

I have chosen my own family and people of Hicks Bay on which to base this study - a choice made initially on the basis of familiarity with the data. It was also an area with which I could identify in terms of kinship, and therefore, and in which I felt at ease in terms of analysis. Since my data is based on a study of such a small area however I recognize that the findings should not be taken as having a general application to New Zealand as a whole. Further research complementing this study would therefore provide valuable data for comparison.

Because Social Anthropologists are chiefly interested in social and cultural institutions, the first part of this study is concerned with kinship, descent and social organisation.

Chapter one looks briefly at the history and location of the Hicks Bay community. The focus of interest in this chapter is on the way in which the past in Hicks Bay weighs heavily upon the present, and the patterns of social organisation which are discernable on the basis of genealogical charters.

Chapter two deals with kinship and descent and the way in which these concepts define rights and obligations in kinship terms between the individual and his kinmen in the community and elsewhere.

Chapter three focuses on family and community life, giving attention to both the internal structure and interrelationships of these units.

In chapter four, we consider the influence of economic changes within the community on organisational principles and values as expressed in the individual's choices and decisions.

Part two concludes this study with a brief sketch of one sector of change within the community, namely child-rearing. This chapter raises several questions, and in particular the relevance of child-care for a community's structure and functioning. We consider the impact which a European belief system, mediated by members of the educational, medical and other governmental professions has had on patterns of child-rearing in Hicks Bay. Despite the reticence of the people to accept this system, they do accept it, and we see the effects of this amalgam on the community's sense of identity (which members take with them into the outside world) and the way in which this identity has been modified by social contact with the dominant western culture of New Zealand Society.

Finally in this study I have combined aspects of psychological anthropology, in particular studies of child-rearing and socialisation, with a biographical and extended case-study approach. I have also merged the usual community axis with a historical axis in order to understand in depth, and from the inside, changing patterns of family interaction within a small community.

In connection with the preparation of this thesis, I am especially grateful to Professor Hugh Kawharu, head of the Department of Anthropology and my personal thesis supervisor, for his valuable criticisms and suggestions, and his unfailing encouragement. I owe much to my family for their faith in me, and for their support in my work. Lastly, my thanks to Mrs Leigh Reweti for proof-reading the draft of this manuscript, and to Miss Wendy Sigvertsen and Mrs Marie Smith for the typing of it.