For Max
This year has been a learning experience, especially in respect of self motivation, but I made it! I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those people who helped me bring this thesis to completion.

The Staff of Massey University History Department, in particular my supervisor Dr. Joel Hayward for first suggesting the topic, for his generosity with time and resources, and for his guidance and support in my frequent moments of uncertainty. Also a special thanks to the History Department Secretaries, Mary Lou Dickson and Lynne Coates.

To Dr. Axel Laurs, my second supervisor, for patiently reading numerous drafts and always having a bottle of red wine on offer. Also to Jürg Brönnimann for all his assistance.

Annette Holm at Massey University Library Interloans for her unbelievable speed in acquiring books, articles, and microfilm from all over New Zealand, Germany, and America.

To my family and friends, for making me hang in there and get it finished. A special thanks to the crew at George St. Deli, especially Jo, for keeping me sane and for the constant supply of caffeine.

And last, but definitely not least, to my classmates: Sue, Nick, Tom, Warren, Daiman, and Donna who shared their ups and downs and for just being there to listen to me complain.
ABSTRACT

This thesis tests the "orthodox perception" that Adolf Hitler was driven by a Weltanschauung which remained fundamentally constant from the outset of his political career. It argues that his theories and concepts underwent continual change and development. The evolution of the Nazi leader's world view is traced by examining his thoughts and reactions as expressed in his rhetoric during the period from 1920 to 1926, the era of his so-called "political apprenticeship".

In order to demonstrate how Hitler's Weltanschauung evolved eight facets of his ideology are examined. These themes: the emphasis the Nazi leader placed on current event topics, the parliamentary system, the use of propaganda, the principle of leadership, the Nazi leader's equation of Jews with Marxism, his theory of Lebensraum, his belief in Aryan supremacy, and the role of faith, were selected either because of the prominence given to them in Hitler's own rhetoric, or because historians repeatedly identify them as central facets of his world view.

This thesis establishes that acceptance of the received wisdom is an oversimplified means of explaining the genesis of Hitler's world view. The Nazi leader's ideology developed according to his own personal experiences as well as the political, economic, and social climate of the era. Hitler's Weltanschauung was far from complete at the outset of his political career and, in fact, some aspects first developed with the writing of his political autobiography, Mein Kampf.
