Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
THE LIFE OF
FREELANCE FILM PRODUCTION WORKERS IN THE
NEW ZEALAND FILM INDUSTRY

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts in Psychology at Massey University

Lorraine Rowlands
2009
ABSTRACT

Eleven male and 10 female freelance production workers were interviewed about their experiences of life within the New Zealand film industry. Respondents’ accounts contrast sharply with glamorous images of the industry portrayed in the media. Respondents enjoyed the creative challenges, camaraderie, excitement, and intensity of their working lives and identified strongly with their work. However, they also experienced continual financial insecurity, unpredictable and demoralising periods of unemployment, and recurrent problems maintaining a reasonable work-life balance. Many of the older respondents cited these factors as their main reason for attempting to find work outside the industry.

Female production workers appeared to pay a particularly high price for their involvement in the industry and often sacrificed other areas of their lives for their careers. Women frequently compensated for this imbalance by becoming even more career focussed, thus compounding the problems in non-work areas of their lives.

Respondents’ accounts are interpreted in relation to current structural conditions, working practices, and power imbalances within the New Zealand film industry. It is argued that freelance production workers’ complex psychological relationship with their work is simultaneously a product of their work environment and helps to perpetuate industry conditions which disadvantage the workforce.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS AND THANKS

Firstly, I would like to thank the 21 respondents who agreed to be interviewed for this research. Their frank and open discussion of their lives has provided the backbone of this thesis, and I can not thank them enough for this.

I would also like to thank the many other industry workers with whom I had long conversations during the course of this research. Some are close friends, others are acquaintances, but all have added value to this research.

To Jocelyn Handy, my supervisor, for her interest in the topic, and her support and guidance in helping me to shape this thesis into a piece of research which I can be proud of.

I could not have undertaken this task without the love and support of my wonderful family. To my partner, Nick, for his unwavering love and his faith that I would bring it all together. He was the inspiration for this thesis, and also provided many contacts, and long hours of discussion. Thanks also to my daughter, Laura, for her love and her emotional support and also for all those wonderful hot meals.

Thanks to you all.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Abstract .................................................................................................................. ii
Acknowledgement and thanks ................................................................................. iii

1. INTRODUCTION ............................................................................................... 1
   1.1 Why study the film industry ................................................................. 2
   1.2 Background on the Hollywood film industry ..................................... 2
   1.3 The development of film in New Zealand ......................................... 4
   1.4 The structure of the film industry in New Zealand ......................... 5
   1.5 Freelancers ......................................................................................... 7
   1.6 Networking and reputation ............................................................. 8
   1.7 Size of the industry ............................................................................ 9
   1.8 Working conditions ......................................................................... 11
   1.9 Global context .................................................................................. 13

2. LITERATURE REVIEW ..................................................................................... 16
   2.1 Introduction ......................................................................................... 16
   2.2 Structural factors ................................................................................ 16
      • Project-based employment .......................................................... 17
      • Networks and reputation ............................................................. 22
      • Careers ........................................................................................... 24
      • Conclusion .................................................................................... 29
   2.3 Psychological consequences for the individual ......................... 29
      • Film as a vocation .......................................................................... 30
      • Psychological contracts of contingent workers ....................... 35
      • Impact of job insecurity, job strain, and work demands ............ 39
      • Work-life balance ........................................................................... 42
   2.4 Gender issues ....................................................................................... 47
   2.5 Conclusion ............................................................................................ 54
3. METHODOLOGY ................................................................. 55
   3.1 Theoretical stance .......................................................... 55
   3.2 The respondents .......................................................... 59
   3.3 Interviews .................................................................. 64
   3.4 Analysis ...................................................................... 67
   3.5 Ethical considerations ................................................... 71
   3.6 My experiences ........................................................... 72

4. FINDINGS ........................................................................ 75
   4.1 Introduction ................................................................ 75
   4.2 Getting started ............................................................ 75
   4.3 Project-based employment and financial insecurity ........ 82
   4.4 Social relationships in the film industry ...................... 90
   4.5 The addictive workplace ............................................. 94
   4.6 Work-life balance ....................................................... 102
   4.7 Gender ...................................................................... 109
   4.8 Getting out ............................................................... 119
   4.9 Conclusion ................................................................. 126

5. DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSION ...................................... 128
   5.1 Personal challenges and rewards ................................. 129
   5.2 Networks and interpersonal relationships .................... 133
   5.3 Labour market constraints ....................................... 138
   5.4 Career transition ....................................................... 140
   5.5 Culture of the industry .............................................. 141
   5.6 Role of legislation ..................................................... 144
   5.7 Conclusion: Future of the industry in New Zealand ....... 146
REFERENCES

APPENDICES

APPENDIX 1: Information sheet

APPENDIX 2: Participant consent form

APPENDIX 3: Interview structure

APPENDIX 4: Summary for respondents

APPENDIX 5: Description of freelance film industry roles

APPENDIX 6: Example film set organisational structure

LIST OF TABLES AND FIGURES

FIGURE 2.1 Structural nesting of the freelancer

TABLE 2.1 International of boundaryless careers and project networks

TABLE 2.2 The knowing-why, knowing-how and knowing-when of signalling

TABLE 3.1 Description of respondents