Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Messy bedrooms: issues for parents of teenagers

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Philosophy in the School of Sociology, Social Policy and Social Work at Massey University, New Zealand

Jennifer Verna Jakobs
2005
Errata

Page 21- MSD is Ministry of Social Development.
Page 41-The Families Commission is separate to the Ministry of Social Development.
Abstract

The messy teenage bedroom is a phenomenon that touches a chord with many parents. This thesis reveals how parents interpret their responses to a typical family experience, the messy teenage bedroom and how they view the role of parenting a teenager. The research is conducted within the environment of everyday families and considers how the role of parent of teens is located in society.

A qualitative methodology is employed to explore parents' reality through eight individual in-depth semi-structured interviews. A focus group of teenagers provided an insight to the teen perspective of the parental response to the messy teenage bedroom.

The messy bedroom emerged as an unresearched topic though it is a familiar experience in Western cultures. Discussion about the messy teenage bedroom is most often located in popular literature and websites. The research revealed issues particular to parenting in the 21st Century. The teenage bedroom has changed from a place to sleep to a space where teenagers live, play, and socialise. The teen bedroom is seen as a place for the teen to display and experiment with their identity. It was found that many teens have more 'gear' than their parents, many value neatness less than their parents, and that messiness has a style factor.

Themes emerging from the research show that several factors are involved in the degree to which the messy teenage bedroom troubles parents. These are: firstly clarity in defining what they are doing as a parent. Secondly, how the parent interprets the messy bedroom as evidence of future behaviour, and thirdly, as evidence of how well one is doing as a parent. The thesis addresses issues of power and control in the parent/teen relationship, such as the shifting of the power balance as the teenager develops to adulthood.

The thesis raises questions about the way parents acquire knowledge, skills and attitudes about the 'job' of parenting teenagers. The research revealed the following key issues. Knowledge of parenting teens is mainly learnt from one's own parents. The acquisition of parenting knowledge seems haphazard and parenting teenagers is seen as different to parenting younger children. Parents feel a lack of support and recognition for their parenting work.

Minimal recognition is accorded to parents in policy making. Parents want more recognition and support from the wider community. Support for parents of teenagers tends to be provided when families are struggling rather than supporting parents to maintain and develop strong relationships before they are in difficulty. Parents want to do their job well but are not always clear about how they can do this. In the context of the increased attention parenting of teens is currently receiving this thesis makes a timely contribution.

Recommendations are made from this study for more research on the everyday parenting of teens and the provision of more recognition, education and support for parents of teens.
Acknowledgements

I want to acknowledge the invaluable guidance and encouragement I have had from my thesis supervisors, Professor Robyn Munford and Dr. Mary Nash, and Dr. Michelle Lunn. I have also appreciated the support I have had from colleagues and the patience and support from my family. Massey University funding, from the Partnership Research Fund and an Advanced Study Award, enabled time for this research to be undertaken.

This research would not have been possible without the willing parents who shared their stories and I thank them for their participation and contribution to the body of knowledge on parenting.
Table of Contents

Abstract

Acknowledgements

Table of Contents

Illustration One: The teenage messy bedroom

Chapter One: Opening The Door

Introduction

The Research Question

Locating Myself in Terms of Parenting

Terms Used In This Thesis

Roadmap To The Following Chapters

Illustration 2: Everything in its place

Chapter Two: Messy Bedrooms and Parenting

Introduction

The Historical Research Focus

The Messy Teenage Bedroom

The Teen Bedroom As A Private Space

Adolescent Development

Pressure And Privacy For Teens

Technology And Teens

The Parent/Teen Relationship

Being A Parent

Styles Of Parenting

‘How To Do It’: The Applied Parenting Literature

The Emotions of Parenting

Power And Parenting

Societal Valuing Of Parents And Parenting

Social Context For Parenting

Policy And Parenting Teens

Cultural Identity

The Families Commission

iv
Chapter Five: “I don’t have to live in it”

- Introduction
- Messiness is Typical
- Consistency of Descriptions of Messy
- Tidiness / Messiness Generational Differences in Messiness
- Messiness is Stylish
- Teen Identity Formation
- Teenage Comfort
- Teens’ Perspective
- Changed use of the Teenage Bedroom
- Parental Anxiety
- Control of the Teen Bedroom
- Power Shifts
- How Tidy are Boys or Girls?
- Conclusion

Chapter Six: Being a Parent

- “It’s easier with other peoples’ children”
- Introduction
- “Am I doing it right?” What is parenting?
- Parent or Friend
- It’s a Strange World
- The Reciprocal Impact of the Parent/Teen Relationship
- The Teenager: “He’s Morphed into Something Else”
- The Role of the Extended Family
- Family Rules around Teen Bedrooms
- Support for the role: You are not totally on you own or are you?
- Conclusion

Chapter Seven: “It takes a village to raise a child”

- Introduction
- Being Heard
- Cultural Differences
- Parents want to do well
Illustration 1: The messy bedroom