Making sense of youth suicide: Exploring young New Zealanders’ views

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Arts
in Psychology

at Massey University, Wellington,
New Zealand

Casey Williams
2016
Abstract

Due to its sensitive nature, the suicide of young people can be a complex and difficult issue to address; yet it needs to be better understood in order to reduce the rate of young New Zealanders who die from suicide. While there has been a significant amount of research conducted on youth suicide, the aim of this research was to gain a deeper understanding of youth suicide within New Zealand by exploring why young people think their peers attempt, or die from, suicide. Six focus groups were held with 19 participants aged 16 to 24 years old. Discussions were transcribed and thematic analysis of the transcripts identified five themes and ten subthemes. These were: relationship factors (bullying and intimate relationships), internal factors (depressive disorders and coping skills), gender (kiwi masculinity and rates), external factors (alcohol and other drugs and circumstances), and support services (access and reluctance/barriers). The participants identified that youth suicide can be the result of a variety of factors, particularly noting the relationship between bullying (face to face or cyber-bullying) and suicide. It is recommended that a component which addresses youth suicide and provides young people with positive coping strategies is implemented into the New Zealand educational curriculum. It is anticipated that changes to the education curriculum, and by society challenging and changing common gender stereotypes, will help reduce youth suicide within New Zealand. Given that this research utilised a small sample size, where the majority of participants were female of European or Pakeha descent, future research with a larger more diverse sample would be beneficial.
Acknowledgements

Dr Tatiana Tairi and Prof Antonia Lyons thank you for your knowledge, the encouragement, guidance, and support.

To the 19 individuals who volunteered to participate in my research, thank you for sharing your valuable views on youth suicide within New Zealand.

Lastly, to my husband Kieran and our three sons, Eli, Finn, and Zach, who sacrificed family time while I completed this research, thank you.
Dedication

My first experience with suicide was when I was 10 years old, when my uncle died from suicide. During the process of this research a childhood friend died from suicide. This research is dedicated to Richard and Tracey, and to the many other young New Zealanders who have died too early.

Richard John Sollitt
16th July 1968 - 19th September 1993

Tracey Ann Webster
16th March 1984 - 1st June 2016
Table of Contents

Abstract........................................................................................................... II
Acknowledgements....................................................................................... III
Dedication........................................................................................................ IV
Foreword......................................................................................................... IX
Chapter 1: Suicide: Terminology, Prevalence, and Risk Factors................. 1
  Definition of Suicide.................................................................................... 2
  Prevalence of Suicide.................................................................................. 3
  Risk Factors................................................................................................ 6
    Previous Suicide Attempt......................................................................... 7
    Psychopathology....................................................................................... 7
    Anxiety.................................................................................................... 9
    Family Relationships.............................................................................. 10
    Sexuality.................................................................................................. 11
    Adverse Life Events............................................................................... 12
    Bullying.................................................................................................. 14
Chapter 2: Approaches to Investigating Suicidal Behaviour....................... 16
  Psychological Autopsy.............................................................................. 16
  Longitudinal Research.............................................................................. 18
  Multiple-Group Comparison Study......................................................... 19
  Young People’s Perceptions on Suicide................................................. 20
Chapter 3: Methods..................................................................................... 26
  Research Approach and Design............................................................... 26
  Recruitment Process................................................................................ 26
Focus Group and Participant Details

Procedure

Ethics

Data Analysis

Phase 1: Familiarisation with the data

Phase 2: Coding the data

Phase 3: Searching for themes

Phase 4: Reviewing themes

Phase 5: Defining and naming themes

Chapter 4: Results

Relationship Factors

Bullying

Intimate Relationships

Internal Factors

Depressive disorders

Coping Skills

Gender

Kiwi Masculinity

Rates

External Factors

Alcohol and other drugs

Circumstances

Support Services

Access

Reluctance/Barriers
List of Figures and Tables

Figure 1: Number of deaths from suicide for males and females aged 15-24 years old New Zealand__________________________5
Table 1: Suicide within New Zealand__________________________4
Table 2: Participant Information______________________________28
Table 3: The Five Themes and their 10 Subthemes______________35