There are always debts incurred in the process of researching and writing a thesis, and I would like to acknowledge the people whose expertise, knowledge and patience I have drawn on over the past sixteen months.

Staff in the History Department at Massey University have been helpful and supportive in many ways. I would particularly like to thank Dr James Watson for material assistance to attend a Melbourne conference; Dr Kerry Taylor for keeping me facing in the right direction; and my supervisor Professor Margaret Tennant for her breadth of knowledge and suggestions on how to improve the text. Its faults, however, are all mine.

Archivists have also greatly aided my progress. I thank Lesley Courtney at the Ian Matheson Palmerston North City Archives, and Marcia and Fred Baker at the Methodist Church Archives in Christchurch. Marcia and Fred's ability to call to mind and hand a wondrous diversity of information, and their warm hospitality, are greatly appreciated.

Everyone who I spoke to at the MSSC was helpful and generous. My thanks especially to Graham Pritchard, who found documents and answered questions with commendable patience.

Profound debts of gratitude extend to my family, who kept faith when I found it hard to do so, and continued to love me at my most unlovable; and to my friends, who became skilled at guessing when it was OK to ask how it was going – and when to just keep going.

Finally, I would like to acknowledge the sustained and often unheralded efforts of community volunteers, including those of the MSSC, without whose work and commitment we would all be the poorer.
