Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Working Well: Women’s Experience of Managing Psychological Wellbeing as Sex Workers

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts in Psychology at Massey University, Aotearoa/New Zealand.

Janet Marie
2009
Abstract

Despite evidence to the contrary, policy makers, some researchers and many who provide health and social services to sex workers continue to reflect and reinforce the notion that sex workers are dysfunctional and constitute a threat to public health. This thesis presents the results of a study which explicitly examined how indoor sex workers look after their psychological wellbeing. Twelve participants (who had worked as sex workers for at least 3 years) took part in semi-structured interviews and discussed how they looked after themselves both at work and in their wider social context. Interviews were transcribed and analysed using interpretative phenomenological analysis. Two main themes emerged from the data. The first, “doing sex work”, relates to workplace practices. The second theme, “being a sex worker”, relates to how the women understand their experience of being a sex worker in their social context and how they care for themselves in this arena; also apparent in this theme are aspects related to entry and exit of the industry. All participants took part in the study to increase understanding of and social justice for sex workers. Most of the participants see sex work as having a positive contribution to their personal growth. The findings show that participants are resilient and employ self-care practices that are commonly used by many in occupations that deal with people or who are stigmatised in some way. Major conclusions drawn from the study are that working in a supportive environment, prior understandings of sex work, personal traits and reasons for entering the sex industry are closely related to positive psychological wellbeing.
Acknowledgements

There are many people who have made invaluable contributions to this thesis. First and foremost are the twelve women who gave their time and energy to share intimate details of their lives with me. I wish to thank them for that and also for their bravery in allowing intimate details of their lives to be made public and for trusting me to honour their stories. Thanks too, to the brothel owners who allowed me to ‘hang out’ in their place of business and for contacting some of the participants.

Secondly, my most sincere and heartfelt thanks to my supervisors Mandy Morgan and Antonia Lyons. Mandy has been there for me from the time I first started to think about this project. Her guidance and gentle challenging has made this thesis what it is. Antonia joined us later in the process and has made invaluable contributions to the write up process and provided easily accessible guidance and support.

The list of friends who have provided food and other gestures of support is too long to place here, and I am sure to miss someone out. In particular my friend and fellow student Denise Blake kept me sane and focused with her wit and critical eye. Thanks too, to Ken Rowe for many cups of coffee and hours of proof reading over the years.

I also am thankful to New Zealand Prostitute’s Collective for supporting this project. Catherine Healy for ongoing support and information and Anna Reed for support, shared joy and contacting South Island participants.

Thanks to Massey University Distance Library for their prompt and friendly service and to the Wellington campus for providing us with a superb study space.

Lastly and most importantly I wish to thank my family. My children Shannon Lynds, and Callum and Dion Margetts, and my son-in law Simon Lynds. My wonderful family have unconditionally supported me through many years of study. There is not enough room here to express all my gratitude and the love I have for these precious and beautiful people.
Table of Contents

Abstract ii

Acknowledgements iii

Table of Contents iv

List of Tables vi

Chapter One: Introduction

Introduction 1

Setting the scene 2

- Definitions: What constitutes sex work? 2
- Organisation of thesis 10

Chapter Two: Theoretical landscape

Introduction 11

Sex work as a perilous profession 11

- Research in non Western countries 13

A Change of focus? 14

- Current trends 14
- Context 15
- Reasons for entry 16
- Describing the work 17
- Paradoxes and contradictions 17
- Aotearoa/New Zealand Research 18
- Wellbeing 21
- Stigma 23
- Wellbeing in sex worker populations 26
- Emotional labour 28
- Coping strategies in sex work 30
- Where this project fits 32
- What the women know: the voices of sex workers 33

Feminist debates 35
Chapter three: Theoretical framework

Introduction 44
Traditional methods 45
Qualitative methods 46
Feminist research in Psychology 47
Feminist Standpoint Theory 48
Interpretive phenomenological analysis 50
Common ground: a hybrid approach 51
Generalisation 51
The place of the subject 51
The place of the researcher 52
Reflexivity 53

Chapter Four: Research Design

Introduction 56
Ethical Considerations 56
The Participants 58
Data Collection 60
Analysis 61
Doing research 64

Chapter Five: Analysis and discussion

Introduction 65
Doing Sex Work 66
It looks like it is about sex 66
Fumbling around in the dark 70
You’re the boss in the room 75
Acting up or acting out? 80
Clients with issues 86
That’s how women deal with it 91
It’s a very special job 95