Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
The Development of Security Intelligence in New Zealand, 1945 – 1957

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Defence Studies

at Massey University, Manawatu

New Zealand

Miriam L. Wharton

2012
Abstract

This thesis focuses on the development of security intelligence in New Zealand between the end of World War II in 1945 and the formation of the New Zealand Security Service in 1956-57. It provides an overview of how this development occurred at a government, senior executive and senior advisory level. There are three key questions that form its parameters: What were the key events and influences which shaped the development of New Zealand’s security intelligence from a predominantly police-oriented capability in 1945 into an independent capability from 1956-57? Who were the domestic and international parties contributing to that development? What is the significance of this period in New Zealand’s intelligence history? A qualitative and generally chronological methodology is applied to describe the process of maturation that security intelligence in New Zealand underwent during the period in question, beginning with a brief description of the arrangements in place before and during World War II. The majority of the thesis is concerned with describing and analysing how domestic and international influences shaped the progression of a security intelligence capability in New Zealand, culminating in the formation of the Security Service. In doing so it broadens understanding of the state’s intelligence history in the early to mid-twentieth century, while remaining aware of the complexity of intelligence as it is applied within a state context.
Acknowledgements

First in the list of those to thank must be Dr John Tonkin-Covell, whose efforts as supervisor have been consistent, persistent and patient. Among those organisations which have supported this project I particularly thank the New Zealand Security Intelligence Service for making available primary source documents which have formed the core of this thesis, the New Zealand Defence Force for covering most of the study costs, and Massey University’s Centre for Defence and Strategic Studies for managing, teaching and administering me through the entire degree.

My family have endured long hours of silence and closed doors, accepting the necessity of study time at the expense of family time, over the past few years. In recognition of their ongoing support I would like to dedicate this piece of work to them.
Table of Contents

Abstract
List of Tables

Introduction
Chapter One Security Intelligence in New Zealand until 1945
Chapter Two International Influences and the Beginning of the Cold War
Chapter Three Threats and Targets
Chapter Four The Police Special Branch
Chapter Five In Search of a Security Intelligence Capability Solution
Chapter Six Creation of the New Zealand Security Service
Conclusion

Appendix A Timeline of Events
Appendix B The Internal Security Problem in New Zealand (Part 1)
Appendix C The Security Problem in New Zealand
Appendix D Charter of the British Security Service
Appendix E Directive for the Establishment and Maintenance of a Security Service [ASIO]
Appendix F Charter of the Australian Security Intelligence Organization
Appendix G Directive on Constitution and Operation of the New Zealand Security Service
Appendix H Order-in-Council
Appendix I Peter Fraser
Appendix J Ian Frank George Milner
List of Tables

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Table</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Table 1</td>
<td>Relationship of Intelligence Types to End-States</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Table 2</td>
<td>The Status Quo PSB Reporting Chain</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Table 3</td>
<td>PSB Reporting Chain Reorganisation as Proposed by Samuel T. Barnett, 13 March 1956</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Table 4</td>
<td>NZSyS 1956-57 Structural Diagram</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>