Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Individuals’ Perspectives of Causes and Influences on their Diagnosed Anxiety Disorders

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Arts

In

Psychology

at

Massey University, Albany

New Zealand

Lyn Birrell

2013
Abstract

Anxiety disorders are the most common type of mental disorder in New Zealand, as they are in the Western world. However, little research has been done on how persons with anxiety disorder conceptualize their respective diagnoses. This small community based, qualitative study interviewed seven individuals diagnosed with anxiety disorders and tried to capture the content and complexity of their disorder. Volunteer participants responded to a flyer placed at an anxiety disorders clinic, located in Auckland, New Zealand. Participants included one male and six females, aged from mid 20 to early 40s. Criteria for participation included being diagnosed with an anxiety disorder by a health professional. Participants generally spoke in terms of their problems in living, as well as the development and course of their disorder. All participants reported that (1) their disorder was chronic and pervasive; (2) their condition was debilitating at times; (3) their condition was complicated by depression; and (4) dysfunction or disruption was present in their early family life. Most participants talked about the early onset of disorder. Recognizing and acting on the need for help was problematic for most participants. Thematic analysis was undertaken to best account for the data, which unfolded as a coherent, consistent and holistic narrative. Three common broad developmental themes were identified: traumatic early life, troubled school life and problems with living. Two broad themes were created to capture participants' thoughts and feelings following diagnosis: rationalisation and post-rationalisation. Discussion specifically suggested the need for further research into the aetiology of anxiety disorders, including the role of maternal controlling behaviour and early onset of the disorder. Further research is also needed to understand and facilitate the help-seeking process for persons suffering from anxiety disorders. A need was identified for the accurate detection of anxiety disorders, particularly when masked by a presentation of depression or other symptoms. Findings suggest that a developmental/ social/contextual model may be most useful in conceptualizing and guiding prevention, intervention and treatment plans. In addition, the impact and meaning of the diagnostic event on people with anxiety disorders requires examination to fully understand all the dynamics and ramifications. Implications from this study include the need for initiatives to aid early recognition and generally to educate people about the nature of anxiety disorders, including the fact that they are common, serious and treatable.
Acknowledgments

My sincere gratitude and thanks go to the many people who have helped and supported me throughout the course of my research and writing of my thesis. In particular I would like to thank Dr Dave Clarke, my supervisor for your steady guidance, patience and helpful feedback and suggestions through the process.

I am indebted to the seven brave participants who came forward and shared their inner most thoughts and feelings, without whom this research would not have been possible. Thank you so much for your valuable contribution and enthusiasm for this project. Your courage is inspirational. I hope you continue to get the all help and support you deserve and that you go on to have the life you always dreamed of.

Thank you to the Phobic Trust Anxiety Disorders Clinic in Auckland, in particular Marcia Read, QSO, for permission to recruit participants in support for this research project. Your dedication to helping people with anxiety disorders is exceptional.

Also I would like to thank my dear friend Jenni Beckett for your warm companionship and continuing encouragement along the journey. Thanks for always being there to listen.

Last but not least I would like to express my tremendous appreciation to my family, my wonderful children, Claire, David and Rebecca and my extra- amazing husband, Dave, in particular, for your unwavering support and commitment to the cause. Thank you for everything!
Table of Contents

Abstract ............................................................................................................................ ii

Acknowledgments ........................................................................................................ iii

Chapter One – Background and Introduction .............................................................. 1

Chapter Two - Aetiology of Anxiety Disorders ............................................................ 7

Chapter Three – The DSM and the Diagnosis of Anxiety Disorders ....................... 11

Chapter Four - Pros and Cons of Diagnosis .............................................................. 13

Chapter Five - Literature Review of Quantitative Research ...................................... 18

Chapter Six – Literature Review of Qualitative Studies .............................................. 21

Chapter Seven - Overview of The Present Study ....................................................... 26

  Methodology ............................................................................................................... 26

  Rationale for choosing a qualitative approach ............................................................ 27

  Rationale for using thematic analysis ......................................................................... 29

  Analytic procedure ...................................................................................................... 30

  Method ........................................................................................................................ 30

  Participants .................................................................................................................. 31

Chapter Eight – Findings ............................................................................................. 36

  Theme One – Traumatic Early Life ............................................................................ 39

  Anxious from an early age .......................................................................................... 39

  Dysfunctional family environment ............................................................................. 40

  Controlled by threats of hell and damnation ............................................................... 42

  Theme Two - Troubled School Life ............................................................................ 44

  Distress at school ........................................................................................................ 44

  Being bullied ............................................................................................................... 45

  Dropping out .............................................................................................................. 46

  Theme Three – Problems with Living ....................................................................... 47

  Feeling bad ................................................................................................................... 47
Need for perfection and control .................................................................50
Ruled by panic...........................................................................................51
Limiting oneself .......................................................................................52
Depressed ..................................................................................................53
Confused and desperate .........................................................................54
Theme Four – Rationalization .................................................................56
Fronting up ...............................................................................................56
Diagnosis versus disorder .......................................................................58
Validation ..................................................................................................59
Theme Five – Post Rationalization .........................................................61
Stigma ........................................................................................................61
Regret ........................................................................................................62

Chapter Nine – Discussion ........................................................................63
Background ..............................................................................................63
Limitations ...............................................................................................69
Future studies ..........................................................................................70
Recommendations ....................................................................................73
Conclusions .............................................................................................75

References ...............................................................................................77

Appendix A: Massey University Human Ethics Committee (MUHEC) Approval .....94
Appendix B: Participant recruitment flyer .................................................95
Appendix C: Screening Questionnaire .....................................................96
Appendix D: Information Sheet about the Research Project .....................97
Appendix E: Interview prompts ...............................................................100
Appendix F: Participant Consent Form ..................................................101

Table 1. Summary of themes and contributing sub-themes .......................38