TAOISM AND CREATIVE PRACTICE

This study identifies creative principles within the Taoist philosophy and examines instances where these principles have influenced historical and contemporary abstract painting practices. It also explores ways in which these principles may influence changes within a personal creative practice. The creation of painted abstract interpretations of the chapters of the I Ching provides a context for exploring the relationships between these principles and the development of a particular creative process.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to express my gratitude to Julieanna Preston for providing inspired advice and encouragement; my supervisors, Dr. Caroline Campbell and Lee Jensen for their guidance and care in revising my work; and to academic and administrative staff at the College of Creative Arts who have contributed their support during the course my study.

I would like to thank family and friends, with particular acknowledgement of Emma Gallagher and Mary Pickett for lending their assistance and expertise in the completion of this document. Special thanks are extended to my mother Donna Kan for the support, time and resources with which to complete this project.

I would like to dedicate this work to my partner Christopher Hill and my daughter Isla who have taught me that true mastery is never attained.
