ABSTRACT

This study was based upon the researchers involvement with a truancy programme operating in Otara South Auckland. It was generally considered by the community of Otara, that the issue of truancy appeared to be getting worse. Unfortunately, there was no solid evidence and data to substantiate the community's perspective.

More than just a statistic gathering exercise, this study sought to gain an understanding of the causes for truancy. There were stories to be told by truanting students and it was through their experiences that themes would emerge for further study and consideration. Beyond the causes were the interventions to such behaviour. The effectiveness of the strategies implemented to intervene this behaviour was particularly important to this study if future truanting behaviour was to be responded to by students, parents, teachers, schools, community and volunteer groups, and government agencies.

The literature from international and local sources provided information of other studies on truancy. Comparisons were able to made with other interventions of previous research work on truancy and the interventions designed for the ten participants in this study. It is clear from the increasing literature on this subject that truancy is a global issue that all communities and educational institutions need to address.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to extend my sincere gratitude to the students and their parents/guardians/caregivers, the participants in this study. Your stories gave this thesis mana.

_Tenei te mihi ki a korua nga kaimahi o M.O.K.O._

I want to acknowledge the officers of the M.O.K.O. Truancy Programme.

_Ki nga whaea o Te Puke o Tara, tenei te mihi whakawhetai ki a korua._

I would also like to acknowledge the support of my colleagues at Te Puke o Tara Community Centre.

I wish to thank and acknowledge the wonderful support of my supervisors Mollie Neville and Jo Bowler for their continuous encouragement and guidance to ensure that this thesis honoured the contributions made by the participants. Your patience and advice was gratefully appreciated.

To a special friend Anne Jones for the many hours of patiently editing the many drafts of each chapter. Your South Auckland experience was of great value to this study.

I also wish to express my _aroha_ to my wife Nita and our children, for their limitless support to this study. _Na matou katoa tenei mahi._

_Ki aku matua, kua ea tetahi a o korua moemoea._
