Abstract
Parent abuse is perpetrated by children and adolescents and is directed toward their parents or caregivers. It is an area of family violence that has received limited attention from researchers in the past and very little qualitative research has focussed on the issue. Consequently, there is a lack of awareness and understanding of parent abuse by victim's friends and families, social services, and government. This research adopts an interpretative phenomenological approach to explore the psychological experience of PA (Parent Abuse). Data was gathered from interviews with eight victims of PA and three super-ordinate themes evolved out of the analysis. As PA is a relatively unrecognised phenomenon in New Zealand it was important that prior to presenting these themes the psychological experience of victims was placed into context. An introductory theme therefore outlines some of the specific acts of psychological, financial, verbal and physical abuse that participants have been subject to. The three super-ordinate themes that followed are; Firstly, the emotional roller coaster of experiencing feelings of unconditional love right through to resentment and hatred toward their abusive child; secondly, blaming ones-self for the abuse occurring and fearing and experiencing blame and judgement from others due to the abuse; and finally, considering the father’s responsibility for the abuse occurring and exploring the possible positive impact of a male role model. It is hoped that the current research will stimulate further research on PA in New Zealand and thus, impact practice, policy, and public awareness.
Preface/Acknowledgements

To the ladies who participated in this research, I acknowledge your willingness and enthusiasm to be involved. Your dedication to tell your story despite the pain and frustration felt was admirable. Your openness and thoroughness was invaluable.

To Keith, my supervisor. Your interest in this topic was unexpected but greatly appreciated. Your firm but fair approach to supervision encouraged me to make the most of this research opportunity for the sake of my participants and for future victims. Even after moving to Wellington you encouraged open lines of communication. I thank you for guiding me through this.

I am also excited to express utmost gratitude to my employer for being so supportive and accommodating throughout the completion of this project. I am hugely appreciative to be working with such a forward thinking and proactive team and wider organization.

Finally, thank you to Massey University for allowing me to conduct this research and for providing some financial assistance. This research was approved by the Massey University Human Ethics Committee.

This thesis is dedicated to my parents, Gail and Brian Laing, who gave me a wonderful childhood full of encouragement and opportunity, and a perfect base upon which I build this work. Also, to my beautiful grandmothers who both passed away during the completion of this master’s thesis. I dedicate this to you, Louisa Mary Laing (01/06/1921 - 21/08/2013) and Melva Jacqueline Vanstone (09/02/1932 - 06/06/2014).
