Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Ethnic Peoples in Aotearoa/New Zealand

Towards Effective Participation In the Development of Social Policy

A Thesis presented in partial fulfillment of the requirements for a Masters in Philosophy (Social Policy) at Massey University.

Ashish Maharaj
2004
Abstract
The underlying theme of this research is that of participation.

Major objectives of this Thesis are as follows:

• to identify those issues in society which are of concern to ethnic peoples

• to identify barriers which may limit the participation of ethnic peoples in the development of social policies, which may affect their wellbeing

• to ascertain major avenues through which ethnic peoples may participate in and contribute to the formulation and development of social policy in Aotearoa/New Zealand.

In neo liberal democratic societies such as Aotearoa/New Zealand all members ought to enjoy freedoms associated with race, ethnicity, religion or culture. In recent post modern times our differences and uniqueness challenge freedoms curtailed through unwittingly systemic discrimination which occurs when cultural assumptions become embodied in society's established institutions and processes. Post modernism reflects an acceptance of the need to deconstruct realities and construct new ways of measuring and discovering. The detrimental effects of capitalism can be ameliorated through social reforms.
Participation is in itself liberating – only through ones own experience does it become fulfilling. Social wellbeing incorporates being comfortable, integrated and accepted within Aotearoa / New Zealand. It impacts on one’s identity and ability to contribute to everyday life. Hence Social Policy making without due participation through appropriate consultation is not only somewhat naive but lends itself to being inherent with real difficulties, often perpetuating even greater injustices and resulting turmoil.

Qualitative research methodology enabled me to interview ten research participants, all of whom being well informed representatives of a cross-section of our ethnic peoples. Each participant is actively engaged in key societal institutions and community organisations that are concerned with safeguarding and promoting our wellbeing, and hence, are influential and authorized commentators. All were enthusiastic participants who commented on the timeliness and importance of the research topic.

Social Policy refers to the role of the state in relation to the welfare of its citizens and how state intervention affects the conditions under which people live. Over time experiences with the continued realities of separation and alienation can cause increasingly isolated fragments that can raise undue anxiety, and if not appropriately addressed, create potential powder kegs. Key findings of this research reiterates the importance of participation by suitably informed ethnic peoples in developing effective social policy that affects their wellbeing.

It is not enough to advocate participation, one must also be participatory. To this effect this thesis invites the reader into worthy consideration of the importance and immediate needs that presents itself. It is argued that while it is important that differing ethnic groupings be accepted by society the emphasis ought to be on bringing them in as players in the political community rather than on simply accepting them as members of the economic, moral and legal community within an environment characterized by the forces of market capitalism, political pluralism and cultural diversity.
Acknowledgements

There are many who have contributed towards making this journey a reality. My thanks to all of you. Specifically to the research participants for without your deliberations this thesis would not have been possible.

My thesis supervisors, Dr. Jocelyn Quinnell and Dr. Leland Ruwhiu. I have enjoyed our many discourses and am indebted to your insight, guidance and encouragement. Kia Ora.

The administration and staff at Massey University School of Sociology, Social Policy and Social Work, Turitea Campus, Palmerston North. Your assistance has been invaluable and has made this journey all the more tolerable.

My dear brothers Rocky, Roggy, Noel and Rohit and all who are part of our collective Whare. Thanks for your insights, love, encouragement and support. Jah Love – Positive.

Jordan, Shaquille and Kimberley. Your patience, support, encouragement, understanding & strength in times of adversity is truly inspiring. Your Aroha throughout is ‘da bomb.’

Sincere thanks to George, Gail & the Jahnke Whanau; Lydia, Damian, Gabriel, Jane, David & Mark. Thank you all for your interest and encouragement. Special thanks to my gurus over the years, and to June Mackey for your enthusiasm and your nimble fingers.

My many friends here in Aotearoa. The brethren in Wainuiomata. Our lively contemplations long into the wee small hours back in the days was always ‘one step forward’. To jah roots back in my hometown of Lami, Fiji - nestled amongst those sunny blue skies, warm rains, green hills and blue waters - soon come: Kia Ora, Vinaka Vaka Levu & Namaskar ‘...come a long way...’

Dedicated to the following very special lives who have passed on through...

my much loved and inspirational Mum & Dad
my childhood friends Teaupola Ledua, Onny Crocker, William Kutti & Colin Caldwell
and to the mystical Ganjah....

‘always around, can’t stop a good vibration’
om shanti
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Abstract ...................................................................................................... ii

Acknowledgement .................................................................................. v

Table of Contents .................................................................................. vi

Introduction ............................................................................................. 8

Chapters

1 Background Setting the scene - Introduction .................................. 12
   Historical Determinants ................................................................. 12
   Conclusion .................................................................................... 24

2 Literature Review - Introduction .................................................. 26
   Theoretical Perspectives ............................................................... 33

   Marxism
      Critique of Capitalism .............................................................. 34
      Political economy ................................................................. 35
      Role of the state ................................................................ 36
      Role of welfare state ........................................................ 36

   Fabianism
      Citizenship ........................................................................... 38
      Economic efficiency .......................................................... 38
      Strategy of equality ............................................................ 39

   Neo Liberalism
      Major influences ................................................................. 40
      Neo conservatism ............................................................... 41
      The New Right ................................................................. 42
      Pluralism ............................................................................. 44
      Liberal democracy and elitism ........................................ 45

   Participatory democracy ........................................................... 47
   Conclusion .................................................................................... 48
Migration Trends & Statistical Analysis

- Introduction .................................................. 49
- Historical overview ............................................ 49
- Post WWII Migration .......................................... 53
- Statistical Analysis ............................................. 61
- Conclusion ....................................................... 64

Exploring Participation

- Introduction .................................................. 66
- Theoretical orientations ........................................ 66
- Social Capital .................................................. 75
- Rationalisations ............................................... 81
- Public Choice theory ........................................... 85
- Potential of Social Capital .................................... 88
- Conclusion ....................................................... 94

Methodology & Ethical Considerations

- Introduction .................................................. 96
- Rationale for Research Design ............................... 97
- Research design ............................................... 101
- Ethical considerations ......................................... 106
- Conclusion ....................................................... 111

Research Findings & Key Themes

- Introduction .................................................. 112
- Conclusion ....................................................... 132

Significant Contemporary Initiatives

- Discussion ..................................................... 134
- Treaty of Waitangi ............................................. 147
- Conclusion ....................................................... 154

Conclusions & Recommendations

- A Positional Statement ......................................... 162

- Appendices ..................................................... 164
- Bibliography ................................................... 209
- Glossary ......................................................... 214