The author of this thesis owns all copyrights to the thesis. The author only authorises the download of a copy of this thesis for the purpose of research and private study. Reproduction of this thesis anywhere else may not occur without the authors’ consent.
Narratives of the self:
The impact of migration on the health of Latinos living in Wellington, New Zealand

A thesis presented in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

Masters in Science
in Psychology

At Massey University campus Wellington,
New Zealand

Nancy Liliana Ivanova Flores-Herrera

2015
The author of this thesis owns all copyrights to the thesis. The author only authorises the download of a copy of this thesis for the purpose of research and private study. Reproduction of this thesis anywhere else may not occur without the authors’ consent.
Abstract

This research examines how Latinos living in Wellington have made sense of their experiences and negotiated their identity positions during their acculturation process to New Zealand society. It also examines the impact of acculturation on these Latinos, found in their narratives and dialogical positioning. Utilising the qualitative research methods of a dialogical self theory framework to inform a narrative inquiry analysis of recorded interviews, I explore the experiences of migration, social connectedness and health had by ten Latinos living in Wellington New Zealand. This research found that during the process of acculturation to New Zealand society these participants made sense of their experiences of migration, social connectedness and health as part of a process of resilience building; which they felt they achieved through being positive in the face of adversity. During their acculturation process these Latino participants underwent a diverse array of experiences including: a lack of social interaction, a cultural clash between their cultural values and the values of New Zealand society, a lack of social participation and social connectedness, difficulty gaining employment, feeling like they are ‘the other’, and experiencing disparity in the healthcare system. The Latinos participating in this research negotiated their identity positions by adopting multiple identities which enabled them to navigate their world. In conclusion the aforementioned experiences have hindered these Latinos’ process of acculturation as well as their upward mobility in New Zealand society.

Key words: Latinos living in Wellington New Zealand, migration, acculturation, health, dialogical self theory, narrative inquiry, social constructionism, critical realism, social connectedness
Acknowledgements

I would like to thank all the people who helped me to realise this research. I would like to dedicate this thesis to my beloved mother Nolfa Herrera, who has always believed in me, loved me unconditionally, supported me in all my decisions and who has being a strong pillar in my life. I would like to thank all my beloved family: my parents, my brothers, my sisters in law, my aunts, my uncles and my grandmother for their constant encouragement, love and support.

I would like to thank all my friends who were always understanding of my commitment to my studies and supported me during the hard times. I would like to thank my dear friend Toni Carson for helping me to check the grammar and flow of my writing during the entire year it took me to write this thesis. I would like to thank her for reading my never ending drafts and for all the late nights that we spent together going through these drafts.

I would also like to thank my supervisor Kerry Chamberlain, for believing in me and my capabilities. I would like to thank him for supporting me in all my decisions during the completion of this Masters research. I would like to thank Massey University Disability Services for their support and help through my years of education at Massey. I would also like to thank the Student Health and Counselling Services at Massey University, and especially Patricia Ford for her invaluable support, understanding, advice and encouragement during any difficult times that I had while studying at Massey University.

I would especially like to thank all the Latinos living in Wellington who participated in this research. I am very grateful to you for sharing your valuable experiences of migration, acculturation, social connectedness and health with me.
Finally I would like to thank all my co-workers who helped me, encouraged me, supported me, or were with me during this process because without all of you this research would never have been possible.
Table of Contents

Acknowledgements ...........................................................................................................i
Abstract ............................................................................................................................ii
Table of Contents ...........................................................................................................iii
List of Figures ...................................................................................................................vi

Chapter 1

Introduction to the impacts of migration and acculturation on the health of Latinos living in Wellington, New Zealand .................................................................1
  Understanding the phenomenon of migration of Latinos to Aotearoa/New Zealand ..........4
  The context of international migration ........................................................................4
  The need for research on migration from a social science perspective .....................9

The importance of understanding the acculturation process of Latinos to New Zealand within the context of international migration ......................................................10

The impact of power relationships on migration processes ..................................12
Using a Dialogical Self Model to understand acculturation ..................................14
Understanding impacts on the health of migrants during their acculturation process ....20
Migrants experiences of uncertainty, stress, and anxiety in a global world .............24
Research aims ..............................................................................................................27

Chapter 2

Methodology ............................................................................................................... 29
  Addressing the philosophical foundations of this research ......................................29
  Ontology .....................................................................................................................29
  Epistemology ............................................................................................................31
  Narrative Inquiry .......................................................................................................34

Chapter 3

Methods ....................................................................................................................... 44
  Population sampling ................................................................................................44
  Participants ................................................................................................................44
  Criteria for participation .........................................................................................45
  Procedure for conducting interviews .................................................................46
  Ethics .........................................................................................................................48
  Analysis .....................................................................................................................51

Self reflection on my personal experiences as a migrant ......................................51
Conducting the narrative inquiry analysis ............................................................53

Chapter 4

Findings and Discussion .......................................................................................... 55
  Experiences of migration, acculturation, social connectedness and health ............55
  Experience of not having the language .................................................................55
  Experience of not being able to participate in social interactions .......................60
  Experience of a lack of social participation and social connectedness ..................64
  Experience of experiencing difficulty gaining employment ................................68
  Experience feeling like you are the other ..............................................................74
  Experience of being positive as a way of being healthy .......................................76
Experience of experiencing disparity in the healthcare system.........................................................81

Chapter 5

Conclusion..............................................................................................................................................87
References..............................................................................................................................................93

Appendices...........................................................................................................................................102

Appendix A: Information sheet in Spanish......................................................................................102
Appendix B: Information sheet in English.........................................................................................105
Appendix C: Participant’s consent form in Spanish........................................................................107
Appendix D: Participant’s consent form in English.........................................................................108
Appendix E: Guide for Interview Questions....................................................................................109
List of Figures

Figure 1. Participant’s nationality and age ............................................................47