Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Bringing Practice into Theory: Social Workers' Experiences of Bringing Social Work into Attachment Theory

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Masters of Philosophy

School of Social Work and Social Policy

at Massey University, Palmerston North, New Zealand.

Maree Anne Foley

2007
Abstract

Attachment theory and social work have sustained an ongoing relationship since the early work of John Bowlby in the 1940s through to the current day. This longstanding relationship provided a frame for this current study which: explored social workers’ described experiences of using attachment theory as a social work practice theory and identified patterns of processing attachment theory for social work practice. This qualitative study was methodologically guided by a hermeneutic phenomenological paradigm based on the work of Max van Manen (1990). Data collection involved a review of relevant literature followed by semi-structured in-depth interviews. Data construction included the development and implementation of a “Letter of Understanding Process” in conjunction with the construction of transcripts. Data-analysis processes consistent with hermeneutic phenomenological methods were utilised. Review of the literature suggested that attachment theory, originally developed by Bowlby (1958) and Ainsworth (1963), emphasised a relational perspective inclusive of the attachment-caregiving-exploratory systems. However within the translation process of this theory and its developments over the decades into a social work practice theory, the focus shifted from one of relationships at times of high need to one where the client and their external world of events and happenings was emphasised.

Findings from the interviews found social workers’ experiences of the use of attachment theory, reflected identified shifts of focus within the literature. Also found was a theory-practice processing pattern identified as the social worker “bringing practice into theory”. In light of these findings, the social worker was foregrounded as one who brings practice into the lived experience of theory. Issues of sustaining the coherence of attachment theory in practice and issues of context were explored as impacting on the lived experience of theory and practice. In response to these findings practice implications were considered resulting in the development of attachment theory informed social work practice principles. Finally based on the conclusions of this study an attachment theory informed model of reflective practice was recommended along with considerations for future research.
Acknowledgements

Thank you to Dave, Theo and Flynn who have had their experience of family life impacted upon in numerous ways as space was ever being created for me to research and write. Thank you to each of you for your help, support and patience.

Thank you to my Massey University supervisors, Dr Mary Nash and Professor Robyn Munford. Our supervision relationship developed over time into a secure base for me. This development was in large part to the conditions for “felt security” that you both consistently and reliably made available to me throughout the lived moments and life span of this research study. Your ever generous capacity to provide me with conditions enabling my “felt security”, in turn enabled exploration, creativity and ongoing momentum.

Thank you to my mentor/coach, Celia Short. Our coaching relationship provided a much needed space to explore the personal impact of writing and researching within the attachment theory field. I am grateful to you for your therapeutic knowledge and skills, your clarity and your capacity to both challenge my thinking and emotionally offer containment to me throughout this research process.

Thank you to the social workers who took part in this study. Thank you for your time and your openness to reflect on the research questions presented to you; for your time again as you reviewed your ‘Letter of Understanding’ and thank you for your consent to include your material in this work. Your contributions have enabled social workers to be remembered as central to creating the lived experience of bringing practice into theory.
Table of Contents

Abstract ............................................................................................................................. iii
Acknowledgements ........................................................................................................... iv
Chapter One: Introduction ................................................................................................. 1
  Rationale and Justification ............................................................................................... 2
  Underlying Philosophy: An Ecological-Attachment Theory Orientation ....................... 4
  Clarifying Concepts and Categories ............................................................................... 7
  The Research Process ..................................................................................................... 9
  Thesis Chapter Outline ................................................................................................... 9
Chapter Two: Attachment Theory and Social Work ............................................................ 12
  Section One: Attachment Theory and Research .............................................................. 13
    Beginnings ...................................................................................................................... 13
      Basic Assumptions of Attachment Theory: The Bowlby-Ainsworth Theory ................. 13
      Attachment Theory from the 1970s through to the present day: Longitudinal Studies .... 20
      Attachment Theory from the 1970s through to the present day: Methodological Advances ... 23
      Attachment Theory from the 1970s through to the present day: Extensions within Attachment Theory ................................................................. 24
  Section Two: Attachment theory within Social Work Practice Theoretical Literature ....... 35
    Attachment Theory in Relationship with Other Social Work Practice Theories ............... 35
    Attachment Theory to Inform Specific Practice Settings ............................................ 36
    Attachment Theory as an Identified Theory to Inform Social Work Practice with Children and their Families ................................................................. 37
    Attachment Theory as a Guide to Social Work Practice .............................................. 39
      The Client's Key Relationships ................................................................................... 40
      The Social Worker's Key Relationships ..................................................................... 42
      The Social Worker- Client Relationship .................................................................... 45
  Conclusion ....................................................................................................................... 48
Chapter Three: The Research Philosophy, Methodology and Method .................................... 50
  The Researcher-Research Question Relationship: Philosophical Underpinnings ......... 50
  Research Design .............................................................................................................. 54
    Reflexivity ..................................................................................................................... 55
    Designing with Research Rigor .................................................................................. 58
  Social Worker Participation Criteria for the Semi-Structured Interview ......................... 60
  The Unfolding Research Method .................................................................................... 62
    Massey University Human Ethics Committee Approval .......................................... 62
    Advertising the Study and Inviting Participant Enquiries ........................................... 63
    Accessing Social Work Participants ......................................................................... 64
    Informed Consent, Privacy and Confidentiality ......................................................... 65
    Preparing for the Interviews ....................................................................................... 66
    Turning to the Nature of the Lived Experience: The Interviews ................................ 67
  Data Construction, Analysis and Representation ............................................................. 69
Constructing Transcripts and Letters of Understandings ............................................................. 69
Searching for Themes .................................................................................................................. 72
Integration of Rigor into the Data Analysis Process ................................................................. 74
Writing and Rewriting: Representing the Data and the Analysis Process through the Findings .. 74
Delimitations and Limitations .................................................................................................... 75
Conclusion ...................................................................................................................................... 76
Chapter Four: Social Workers' Described Experiences of Putting Attachment Theory into their Social Work Practice .................................................. 77
Participant Profiles .................................................................................................................. 78
Interview Summaries ................................................................................................................ 79
Key Informant Interview - Ruth: Consultant Social Worker ...................................................... 79
CJ: Care and Protection/Permanency Planning Social Worker .................................................. 80
Grace: Care and Protection/Permanency Planning Social Worker .............................................. 81
Anne: Adoptions Social Worker .................................................................................................. 82
Dorothy: Care and Protection/Permanency Planning Social Worker ........................................... 84
Maggie: Hospital Social Worker ................................................................................................ 86
Belinda: Care and Protection/Permanency Planning Social Worker .......................................... 87
Responses to the Vignette ........................................................................................................... 89
Section Two: Viewing the Interviews in Relationship to Each Other: Re-Searching for In-Common Experiences ............................................................................ 92
Theme One: The 'Wow' of Meeting Attachment Theory for the First Time ............................... 93
Theme Two: From Theory into Practice to Practice into Theory .............................................. 96
Theme Three: Bringing Practice into Theory: Social Workers' Descriptions of Social Work Practice, Informed by Understood Attachment Theory ............... 98
Theme Four: Bringing Practice into Theory: The Practice Gap between Recognition of Attachment Concerns and Specific Social Work Interventions ................. 103
Theme Five: The Phenomenological Practice Gap between Recognition of Attachment Concerns and Specific Social Work Intervention; Attachment Theory Informed Social Work Assessments ................................................................. 104
Theme Six: The Phenomenological Practice Gap between Recognition of Attachment Concerns and Specific Social Work Interventions; The Social Work Role and Social Worker-Client Relationships .................................................. 108
Conclusion ...................................................................................................................................... 111
Chapter Five: An Exploration of Bringing Practice into Theory ................................................. 113
Bringing Practice into Theory: A Summary ................................................................................ 114
Bringing Practice into Theory: Theoretical and Practice Coherence Challenges ..................... 117
Bringing Practice into Theory: Contextual Influences ............................................................... 120
Bringing Social Work Practice into an Attachment Theory Informed Social Work Practice
Theory: Implications for Social Workers ................................................................. 127
Conclusion .............................................................................................................. 133

Chapter Six: Concluding Reflections and Future Research .................................. 135
Concluding Reflections: Revisiting the Research Questions and the Philosophy, Methodology and Method of Enquiry ................................................................. 135
Concluding Reflections: Social Workers’ Experiences of Attachment Theory and Patterns used to describe these Experiences ................................................................. 137
The Key Recommendation: A Working Model of Attachment Theory Informed Reflective Social Work Practice ................................................................. 143
Future Research Recommendations ....................................................................... 148
Closing Methodological Reflections .......................................................................... 150
Conclusion .............................................................................................................. 153

Bibliography ........................................................................................................... 154

Appendix A: Massey University Human Ethics Approval ........................................... 174
Appendix B: ANZASW Noticeboard Advertisement .................................................. 175
Appendix C: Information Sheet .................................................................................. 176
Appendix D: Updated Information Sheet ..................................................................... 178
Appendix E: Participant Consent Form ......................................................................... 179
Appendix F: Transcriber Confidentiality Form ............................................................ 180
Appendix G: Audio Tape Destruction/ Storage Form ................................................... 181
Appendix H: Interview Questions ................................................................................ 182
Appendix I: Participant Profile Sheet .......................................................................... 184
Appendix J: Letter of Understanding Sample ............................................................. 185
Appendix K: Authority for Release of Tape Transcripts ............................................... 191
Appendix L: Secondary Consent Form ....................................................................... 192
Appendix M: Interview Summaries ............................................................................ 193

Figures
Figure 6.1 Secure-Base Reflective Questions .............................................................. 147

Tables
Table 4.1 Participant Profiles ..................................................................................... 78
Table 6.1 Secure-Base Conditions Clarification Reflective Questions ........................... 148