Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
THE TIES THAT BIND
An exploratory study into the relationships in open adoption

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of
Master of Social Work
At
Massey University, Palmerston North
New Zealand

By
Naomi Bernadette Hesseling-Green

2015
Table of Contents

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS ........................................................................................................ VIII

ABSTRACT .......................................................................................................................... 1

1. INTRODUCTION ............................................................................................................. 2
   1.1 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 2
   1.2 My Story ..................................................................................................................... 3
   1.3 Social Construction of Family .................................................................................. 4
   1.4 Thesis Outline .......................................................................................................... 4
   1.5 The language of adoption ....................................................................................... 5
   1.6 Current Adoption Process ....................................................................................... 6
   1.7 Significance of the research .................................................................................... 7
   1.8 Conclusion ............................................................................................................... 8

2. LITERATURE REVIEW .................................................................................................. 9
   2.1 Introduction ................................................................................................................ 9
   2.2 History of Adoption in Aotearoa New Zealand ..................................................... 10
   2.3 Implications of open adoption ................................................................................ 12
      2.3.1 Definitions of family and parenthood ......................................................... 13
      2.3.2 Stigma ............................................................................................................. 14
      2.3.3 Adoptee ......................................................................................................... 15
      2.3.4 Birthmother/Birthparent ............................................................................... 17
2.3.5 Adoptive Parents

2.4 Triadic Relationships

2.5 Implications for practitioner

2.6 Conclusion

3. METHODOLOGY

3.1 Introduction

3.2 Methodology

3.3 Research Design

3.3.1 Participant Selection

3.3.2 Data Collection

3.3.3 Data Explicitation

3.4 Ethical Research

3.4.1 Access to participants

3.4.2 Informed Consent

3.4.3 Confidentiality

3.4.4 Potential Harm to Participants

3.5 Conclusion

4. THE ADOPTIVE PARENTS

4.1 Introduction

4.2 Pre-Adoption

4.2.1 Definition of Family

4.2.2 Decision to Adopt

4.2.3 Perceptions of open adoption

4.2.4 Pre-Adoption Anxiety

4.3 Adoption Process
4.3.1  Getting the “phone call” ................................................................. 44
4.3.2  Negotiating the Contact ................................................................. 50
4.3.3  Advising the children ................................................................. 51

4.4  Reflections............................................................................................................. 52
  4.4.1  Birthparent role in the family ...................................................... 52
  4.4.2  Bonding and attachment .............................................................. 53
  4.4.3  Relationship between adoptive parents and birthparent. .......... 54
  4.4.4  Challenges of open adoption ....................................................... 55
  4.4.5  Benefits of Open Adoption .......................................................... 56

4.5  Conclusion............................................................................................................ 57

5.  THE BIRTHPARENT ......................................................................................... 58
  5.1  Introduction ................................................................................................. 58
  5.2  Pre-Adoption ............................................................................................. 58
    5.2.1  Why adoption was chosen and knowledge about open adoption? 58
  5.3  Adoption Process....................................................................................... 61
    5.3.1  Selection of adoptive parents ......................................................... 61
    5.3.2  Handover to adoptive parents ....................................................... 62
    5.3.3  Contact ......................................................................................... 64
    5.3.4  Relationship with Adoptive Family ............................................... 66
    5.3.5  What makes the relationships work? ............................................. 69
  5.4  Reflections..................................................................................................... 69
    5.4.1  Birthfather Perspective ................................................................. 69
    5.4.2  Challenges of open adoption ....................................................... 71
    5.4.3  Stigma/Perception ........................................................................ 74
    5.4.4  Benefits of Open Adoption .......................................................... 75
7.2.3 Perception and Reality 104

7.3 How Relationships are Developed and Maintained 105

7.3.1 Titles and Names 105

7.3.2 Boundaries and Communication 106

7.3.3 Trust 107

7.3.4 Gratitude 108

7.4 Integrating Biological and Adoptive Families 109

7.4.1 Defining Family 109

7.4.2 Stigma 110

7.4.3 Identity 110

7.4.4 Fit with Family 112

7.5 Implications for Adoption Practitioners 112

7.5.1 Role of the Social Worker 113

7.5.2 Information Availability 113

7.5.3 Working in Adoptions 114

7.6 Benefits of Open Adoption 114

7.7 The Adoption Act 1955 115

7.8 Conclusion 116

8. SOME CONCLUSIONS 119

8.1 Summary and Conclusions 118

8.2 Limitations and Strengths of the Research 119

8.3 Future Research 120

8.4 Concluding Statement 121
9. BIBLIOGRAPHY __________________________________________ 124

10. APPENDIX I: ETHICS APPROVAL __________________________ 130

11. APPENDIX II: INFORMATION SHEET _______________________ 131

12. APPENDIX III: ADVERTISEMENT __________________________ 133

13. APPENDIX IV: PRESS RELEASE ___________________________ 134
Acknowledgements

To get to the end point has been a long process and would not have been possible without the support, efforts and encouragement of many.

To the heroes of this thesis. The participants. I thank you for your willingness to be involved and to tell your story. I am grateful for your openness to share your experiences. I was moved by each of you and continue to think of you all often.

I would also like to thank my supervisors Dr Michael Dale and Dr Martin Sullivan. Your support, encouragement, firmness, feedback and understanding was the fuel I needed when I didn’t think I was going to get through. Thank you for your guidance and helping me increase my vocabulary!

Thank you to all my friends, family and colleagues who have helped me along the journey. Without your support and encouragement, the finish would not have been possible. In particular I would like to acknowledge my mother Jayne and my brother, Andrew. It is their story that ignited a passion in me in the area of adoption. Thank you for letting me capitalise on your experience. Also thank you to my father John, and Lyndsay, for taking an interest in my work, letting me talk about it and constantly encouraging me. I would also like to thank my mother in law Rona for all her support particularly in helping with typing when I was injured.

I would also like to acknowledge the tremendous amount of work my friend Dr Raymond Merchant has put into producing this thesis. Ray, thank you for all your support. Your proof-reading, editing, feedback and all the encouragement given in spite of your own challenges is overwhelming. Who would have thought that the worlds of Geology and Social Sciences could collide in such a productive way.

Finally to my husband Robert. This thesis has been the mistress throughout our whole relationship, from dating through to marriage. Without you I would not have found the strength to complete this. Thank you for your support, your patience and the constant supply of popsicles while I worked to get this finished. Now let’s enjoy marriage!

I have come to discover that adoption impacts on many people. It seems everyone I speak to has a story to share of their experience be it directly or indirectly. There are two conflicting emotions often bought to the fore. Pain and Joy. There are many narratives behind these emotions. I feel blessed that I was able to hear a portion of these

Mā te Atua me te wāhi ngaro tātou e tiaki e manaaki.
After 30 years of using closed stranger adoption practices, a societal shift in adoption protocols has evolved where open adoption has become the preferred adoption practice. One of the implications to come from open adoption is a new type of parental relationship where there is the possibility of two parental bodies (birth parent and adopted parent) being involved in an adopted child’s life.

This differs from the socially constructed ‘norm’ of a family unit, where the parent – child relationship is dyadic. Because this newly evolved triadic relationship is not strongly role-modelled in society, a new set of rules and norms has needed to be constructed by the adoption triad as they negotiate and define their family unit.

This qualitative research employed a phenomenological approach to explore the lived experience of those involved in an open adoption. Three adoptive parents, three birthparents and three adoptees were interviewed with the purpose of exploring the dynamics in their open adoption relationships.

Through these interviews the research reveals insights into how triadic relationships of the participants are maintained, highlighting the rewards and challenges of this type of family relationship.