Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Lives Unremembered: The Holocaust and Strategies of its Representation

An exegesis presented in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Fine Arts

at Massey University, Wellington, New Zealand.

Tero Markus Rajala

2008
Exergesis abstract

The Holocaust is a subject that seems to defy artistic representation by way of its sheer scale of tragedy and subsequent trauma. As I will demonstrate in this paper, it is hard to restore visibility – pictorial links between past and present realities – to crimes that have been deliberately submerged by its perpetrators. I will examine some of the common strategies used in representation of the victims of the Holocaust since the end of the Second World War, in the mediums of film and photography.

As my main method of enquiry, I will examine three films from different eras, and of very different approaches in terms of their processing of the proposed original evidence, as examples to illustrate my arguments. In the second chapter Alain Resnais’s documentary film Nuit et Brouillard (Night and Fog) is analyzed as a birthplace of the so-called iconography of the Holocaust. Chapter three examines workings of memory through the aesthetic form that was soon to follow; the role and testimony of the survivors is considered through Claude Lanzmann’s Shoah. In the fourth chapter a new player is introduced: the second generation witness of postmemory, works of transmitted but unexperienced realities. In this chapter I will closer examine the workings of art in the game of reprocessing the evidence of the Holocaust, and through Dariusz Jablonski’s film Fotoamator I aim to critique how the previously discussed approaches serve to further lock the Holocaust in an inaccessible canon.

Moreover, the generalization implied – a drive toward universalization of the Holocaust as an idiom or even a metaphor for the dark sides of human history/character – derives from problems of representation; mainly that of anonymity in face of the proposed beauty of the spectacle, of tragedy and suffering in mass-media. A key problem is that any historical document, however we define one, is considered transparent and unmediated, whereas art is clearly something where a degree of mediation is necessarily recognized. In the face of this dichotomy it seems that all the collected "proof" of the Holocaust – witness accounts, photographs, films, material remains – achieves, is to strengthen the prevailing version of history.
Acknowledgements

Thank you to Gavin Hipkins, Ann Shelton and Nanna Saarhelo for their much valued support, suggestions and ideas, and their patience.
Table of contents

Exegesis abstract 2

Acknowledgements 3

Table of contents 4

List of illustrations 5

I. Introduction: A crisis of words, images and remembering 6

II. The establishing shot/scene: First images of what is not there 11
   A campaign of controlled representation 11
   Traces of the "Other" 12
   Night and fog: The specific and the iconographic 14

III. Documentation continues: Attempting access through testimonies of witnesses 18
   Photographs and trauma 19
   The inquisitive camera of Shoah 20
   Memorials and monuments: Limiting aesthetic forms of sites of remembrance 25

IV. Reprocessing of evidence/traces: To witness the witnessing 26
   Strategies of the second generation of witnessing 26
   A release by countermemories 29

V. Conclusion: Against the universality of representation 34

Bibliography 37

Exegesis word count 10,917
List of illustrations

