Abstract

There is a wealth of existing research which reports on programmes aiming to improve the reading skills of children who are struggling to learn to read. This thesis builds on one specific research area where parents are central to the process of reading remediation and are engaged to promote learning and improve reading skills.

In this research the Participatory Intervention Model was used to guide the development and implementation of a collaborative intervention in support of reading development. The researcher and parents jointly developed reading support strategies which linked child assessment data, existing home literacy practices and research led literacy instruction practices. Parents then implemented these strategies during iterative cycles of support and review.

The findings focus on three aspects of the process. Factors which enhanced and inhibited the effectiveness of collaboration are explored. The particulars of parental enactment of strategies to coach children’s reading are revealed. Finally, the impact of parental reading support on the children’s reading skills is highlighted.

Finally, the study presents a new way of conceptualising an intervention as a collaborative endeavour. It proposes a new term; home based pedagogy to describe the actions parents and the researcher took in supporting each child.
Acknowledgements

Although the act of writing a thesis is a solitary endeavor, it cannot be accomplished without the support of others. I have been fortunate to have been surrounded by a supportive community who consistently validated my decision to undertake doctoral study. Particular thanks go to my husband Graham for his love and patience and my sister-in-law, Dr Sue Jackson for mapping the route to a doctorate. I acknowledge my parents, Angela and Jeff, my sister Jill, and my niece Jorja for their belief in me. I am grateful to my extended family and friends for their generous listening and for allowing me time to work on this thesis. I have benefitted from the generous support and guidance of an extensive team of supervisors, Dr Jean Annan, Dr Sally Clendon, Dr Bobbie Hunter, Dr Elizabeth Doell, Dr Brian Finch and Professor Margaret Walshaw. Thanks too, to the colleagues who acted as critical friends, the A+graphia Writing Group for challenging my thinking and my view of myself, and the Weatherly Road Baking Club for measures of sugar and sanity. Final thanks go to the participants in this study for their commitment, care, willingness and honesty.
