Acknowledgements

I would like to express my deepest gratitude to my supervisor Dr Simon Ewing-Jarvie for his advice and direction. Thanks are also due to Dr John Tonkin-Covell for his strategic assessments of terrorism, Dr Jeffery Sluka for his detailed insights into the guerrilla mindset and Dr Jim Veach for a thought provoking discussion of religion and terrorism. I would also like to thank the staff at the Centre for Strategic Studies at Victoria University, the staff at the Centre for Defence Studies at Massey and especially the impressive ladies in the Massey library inter-loan office who provide a thankless service.

Finally, yet importantly, I would like to thank my parents who in addition to providing a safe-haven away from the pressures of University life have been supportive of my studies and wayward travel patterns.

This thesis adheres to the Massey University policy on research practices as set out in MOPPS 3.3.4.
The guerrilla fights the war of the flea, and his military enemy suffers the dog's disadvantages: too much to defend; too small, ubiquitous, and agile an enemy to come to grips with. If the war continues long enough – this is the theory – the dog succumbs to exhaustion and anaemia without ever having found anything on which to close his jaws or to rake with his claws.
