Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Ideology and Policy in the History of New Zealand Technical Education - 1900-1930

A thesis submitted to the Department of Education,
Massey University

In partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts

Liz Gordon

1984
This thesis is a study of historical aspects of New Zealand state education policies. Within the neo-Marxist tradition of the sociology of education, there has recently been much debate over the need to re-interpret the historical development of state education policies. This trend stems from a perceived breakdown in the liberal foundations of education in the past decade. This work is concerned with developing a historically and sociologically adequate framework for analysing aspects of state policy in education, and using this framework to explore and re-interpret selected policies in particular periods.
Acknowledgements

The isolation that surrounds those who attempt work of this nature is famous; however, a thesis cannot be completed without the help, support and friendship of many people. Firstly, I'd like to thank my supervisors: Dick Harker, who would always rather be chasing mermaids; and Roy Shuker, who kept telling me what history really was. Also the Education Department of Massey offered a supportive intellectual environment where creative work was encouraged, challenged and accepted. In particular, Ivan Snook, Roy Nash, Eric Archer, John Codd and David Battersby have been of invaluable help to me.

Secondly, thanks to Allanah Ryan and other 'third floor dwellers' for their support and encouragement. Allanah, as fellow-student, friend and intellectual companion has helped make my year less lonely. Thanks to Alison Stewart for her wonderful proof-reading, friendship and support.

Thirdly, my friend Wendy Craig has always been there when I have needed someone to talk with. Her famous phrase: 'Well I don't know anything about education, but perhaps you should.....' has helped me in more ways than I can adequately express.

Last, but not least, I would like to acknowledge some friends from far away - my sister Chris and Paul Willis - who, through their letters, have consistently forced me to see what I am doing in a broader context.
Contents

1. Theory and Practice in Educational Policy Research
   - The Argument for Theory 2
   - The New Zealand State 7
   - The Capitalist State 11
   - The State as Educator 15
   - The Research Question: Historical Interpretations of Education 17
   - Notes 21

2. Sociology of Education and Educational Policy 23
   - Research in the New Zealand Context 38

3. Views of Ideology 43
   - Marx on Ideology 45
   - The Structuralists 49
   - The Culturalists 55

4. The Analysis of Educational Policy 60
5. Technical Education and Manual Labour

Introduction and Historical Context 87
The 1900 Bill 91
The Debate 94
The Development of Technical Education 1900-1914 101
Palmerston North Technical School 103
Secondary Schools and the Free Place Scheme 106
Secondary Schools and Technical Instruction 110
Technical Education, the Free Place Scheme and Day Technical Schools 112
Notes 120

6. Ideologies and Cutbacks - 1920-1922 123