Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
A tale of two cities: Local government, community events and social capital building

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Business Studies (Communication)

at Massey University, Wellington, New Zealand

Joany Grima

2016
Abstract

This research project investigates the approaches to investment in the staging of community events, supporting strategies and availability of event management resources by two neighbouring local council authorities in the North Island of New Zealand. The perceived impacts of events on the host community and capacity of events to build social capital is also explored, primarily through data collected from interviews with council event organisers, councillors and non-council event organisers.

The findings of this study indicate that both council authorities are supportive of the delivery of events by council and non-council event organisers, providing human, financial and physical capital to enable the output of events despite their being no explicit legal obligation for local government authorities to do so. Event impacts were considered to be positive in nature, falling into the areas of promotional, social and economic impacts. Social impacts were of primary interest, including community engagement and participation, celebrating community, building and fostering community spirit, giving back to the community and attracting new people to the area.

For both councils, there is scope for greater strategic planning around event delivery both as individual authorities and collaboratively, including the establishment of formal monitoring and evaluation to assess the effectiveness of their events investments in meeting set objectives. There are opportunities to capture meaningful data on the impacts of events in the host communities, as well as the building and maintenance of social capital. Event organisers are primarily interested in providing a community asset through their events; motivated by how their events can enhance local well-being and contribute to social capital building. Understanding how and if social capital building occurs and is maintained as a result of community events can be further explored together by council and non-council event organisers.
Acknowledgements

The journey to completing this research project has been enriched by the encouragement and assistance of colleagues at Wellington Institute of Technology (WelTec) and Massey University, academics generously sharing resources and the enthusiasm of its participants. Special thanks to Dr Mimi Hodis, thesis supervisor, for walking alongside me, to WelTec for its ongoing support in nurturing my academic capability, and to those organising the community events peppering our lives with moments of joy that otherwise may not have been.
Table of contents

Abstract i

Acknowledgements iii

Table of contents iv

Introduction

- Background to research project 1
- Research questions and objectives 3
- Local government in New Zealand 4
- The research setting 6
- Key guiding documents 7
- Events portfolio 8
- Events resources for event organisers 9

Literature review

- Background 12
- Definition: Event 13
- Mega and major events 13
- Festivals 17
- Community events 19
- Event objectives & strategic planning 21
- Stakeholders 29
- Event organisers & the host community 35
- Social capital 37
- Social capital & events 43
- Impacts 47
- Social impacts 49
- Social impact measures 53
- Economic impacts 57

Methodology

- Participants 60
- Selection & recruitment 61
- Data collection 63
Data analysis

Findings

Strategic events objectives
Local government support & resources for non-council events
Social capital & events
Impacts

Discussion

Council investment in staging community events
Strategic objectives & investment in community events
Events & host community impacts
Community events & social capital
Comparison of councils’ approach to community events

Limitations

Conclusion

References

Appendix A
Appendix B
Appendix C
Appendix D
Appendix E
Appendix F
Appendix G