Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
ALTERNATIVE ARTICULATIONS: A POST-STRUCTURALIST READING OF A PROGRAMME TO CHANGE NEW ZEALAND'S DRINKING CULTURE

A thesis presented in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts in Sociology at Massey University, Albany New Zealand

Shannon Te Ahu Hanrahan
2006
Abstract

The field of alcohol regulation has been highly influenced by the new public health and its diverse attempts at influencing the conduct of individuals and populations to reduce alcohol-related harm. Dominated by objectivist and rationalist approaches, the new public health often fails to account for the critical role of knowledge, power and language in the construction of alcohol-related harm as an issue of governance. It is in response to the hegemony of the new public health approach, and the internal limit points of this discourse, that alternative understandings of the field of alcohol-regulation emerge.

This study conducts a post-structural reading of one of those alternative understandings, that of the Alcohol Advisory Council of New Zealand’s (ALAC) programme of work known as the culture change programme. Employing the work of Michel Foucault, and in particular, his work on the art of government (“governmentality”), the thesis poses the question: how does ALAC negotiate the tension between those techniques and strategies that compel and coerce individuals and those regimes and frameworks of self-regulation that are calculated to guide individuals' behaviours?

ALAC’s attempt to govern the field of alcohol-regulation through its relationships with external agencies is examined for answers. Using the post-structural discourse theory of Ernesto Laclau and Chantal Mouffe, this study examines ALAC’s construction of the field of alcohol regulation, and its attempts to influence and engage external agencies in the culture change programme.

The findings indicate that ALAC’s liberal conceptualisation of the social world does not account for the struggles over meaning that play out through its relationships with external agencies. The study suggests that if ALAC were to reconceptualise its view of the world as an ‘open social system,’ where meaning is relational, contextual and historically located, a new set of tools becomes available for understanding the future prospects of the culture change programme.
Acknowledgements

_Kia tangi te uru, e whai ake nei te Toro_

_Acknowledge the emergence above the horizon to blaze a pathway of knowledge_

I would like to thank my thesis supervisors Warwick Tie and Paul Spoonley. Thank you for your ongoing guidance and continued belief in my ability to finish this thesis.

Thank you to those that contribute to Massey University's scholarship fund. Your financial donations are gratefully appreciated.

This research would not have been possible without the help, assistance and encouragement of the staff at the Alcohol Advisory Council of New Zealand. Thank you for the support in growing the pool of evidence.

To Kim, for all the time I spent in my office. Thank you for being so understanding. And to my whānau and friends - this has been a long time coming.
Table of Contents

Abstract
Acknowledgements
List of Figures

Chapter One: Introduction – A question of the exercise of power
1.1. The State and the exercise of power
1.2. A programme to reduce alcohol-related harm. The Alcohol Advisory Council of New Zealand (ALAC)
1.3. Challenging the dominant paradigm – Post-structuralism
1.4. This thesis
1.5. The role of the analyst

Chapter Two: Theoretical considerations – The art of government
2.1. The exercise of power
2.2. Sovereignty
2.3. Disciplinary power
2.3.1. The body
2.3.2. Power
2.3.3. Knowledge
2.4. The art of government
2.4.1. Raison D'État – Reason of State
2.4.2. Liberalism
2.4.3. Neo-liberalism
2.4.4. The rise of the responsible individual
2.5. Implications for this thesis

Chapter Three: Mapping the mechanics: Methodology and method

Part One: Methodological overview
3.1. Closed systems – Positivism and empiricism in public health
3.2. Beyond closed systems – Post-structuralism
3.3. Mapping the mechanics of discourse – Laclau and Mouffe
3.4. The practice of discourse analysis – Key terms
3.4.1. Elements that dislocate meaning
Part Two: Data gathering and sources of data

3.5 Semi-structured interviews
3.6 Interview instrument
3.7 Textual
3.8 The analysis of data
3.8.1 The analysis of government
3.8.2 The analysis of barriers to engagement
3.8.3 The analysis of the condition of dislocation

Chapter Four: The analysis of government

4.1 ALAC’s construction of alcohol as a governance issue
4.2 Culture change – the articulation of new concepts
4.3 Establishing a hegemonic position
4.4 Summary

Chapter Five: The analysis of barriers to engagement

5.1 ALAC’s hegemonic intervention
5.2 Antagonising conditions
5.3 Constructing logics of equivalence and difference
5.4 Summary

Chapter Six: The analysis of the condition of dislocation

6.1 The threat of alternative articulations
6.2 Ontological limitations
6.3 Summary

Chapter Seven: Reflections & considerations

7.1 Liberalist and rationalist understandings
7.2 Moving forward: governance of open systems
7.3 Theoretical considerations and future trajectories

Bibliography

Appendix A: MUHEC application
Appendix B: MUHEC approval
Appendix C: Introductory email to participants
Appendix D: Interview instrument
Appendix E: Information sheet
Appendix F: Interview consent form
Appendix G: Consent form for the release of recorded transcript
List of Figures

Figure 2.1: A programme to change New Zealand's drinking culture  33
Figure 5.1: Key concepts (moments) within the discourse articulated  77
by ALAC