Transgressive Gestures: Women and Violin Performance in Eighteenth-Century Europe

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Music in Musicology at Massey University and Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand School of Music

Hester Bell Jordan

2016
Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Abstract

Studies concerning eighteenth- and early nineteenth-century women musicians abound within recent musicological scholarship, but the focus on singers and keyboard players—whose musical activities are understood to have “affirmed” their femininity—has had the effect of obscuring players of less typical instruments. Violin-playing, frequently cast as a man’s activity and imbued with indecent associations, was a case in point. Yet despite the connotations of the instrument, a small but significant group of women did play the violin: it is these violinists that this thesis takes as its central focus. Looking first at the complex reasons behind objections to women’s violin performance, a number of factors that restricted women’s access to the violin—including the influence of the male gaze and limits placed on women’s physical movement—are revealed. Particular conditions nevertheless enabled certain women to play the violin, namely the personal, educational, and economic support available from diverse sources such as family members, patrons, and institutions like convents and the Venetian ospedali.

In addition to placing women violinists in their historical context, this thesis centres on an analysis of a violin concerto by one of the most well-known female violinists of the era, the Italian virtuoso Regina Strinasacchi. The analysis of Strinasacchi’s Violin Concerto in B flat major is strongly performance based and focuses on the issue of gender and physical movement (performance gesture), topics which were of much interest to eighteenth-century commentators who witnessed women violinists performing. As such the analysis engages with concepts from “embodied” musicology. In exploring Strinasacchi’s concerto we see that female violinists could experiment with a variety of gendered roles through violin performance, embodying both masculinity and femininity through their transgressive gestures. By taking a closer look at women’s violin performance and experiences, this thesis aims to show that these violinists were not as peripheral to the workings of the wider musical community as is sometimes implied. Furthermore, it aims to put women violinists more firmly at the centre of their own stories, challenging the tendency to treat female violinists as novel anomalies.
Acknowledgements

There are many people to thank for bringing this thesis to fruition. Firstly my supervisor, Dr Inge van Rij, for her constant support, encouragement, and thoughtful feedback throughout the researching and writing process.

Also my secondary supervisor, Prof. Peter Walls for generously allowing me to borrow a Classical-era violin on which to explore eighteenth-century modes of playing, for giving me lessons on eighteenth-century technique, and for challenging me to always look at my writing with a critical eye.

I would like to thank my examiners, Erin Helyard and Samantha Owens, for their thoughtful and in depth feedback on this thesis which has helped to make it a richer piece of research and a strong piece of writing.

To my parents, for helping me to get where I am today through love and support of many kinds. Mum – thank you for always wanting to hear about my latest discoveries, and for proofreading. And Dad – thank you for your sage advice, reassurance, and encouraging feedback on drafts.

Thanks also to the British Library for both providing scanned facsimile copies of the manuscript parts of Strinasacchi’s concerto, and for allowing me to produce a score from those parts for inclusion in this thesis.

To my fellow Masters students (Lynne and Nell in particular) for helping to create an enjoyable, supportive, and stimulating environment, and always being keen for hot chocolate breaks.

And finally to Myren, for patiently listening to me think out loud, helping me solve all the technology problems I encountered at the drop of a hat, and spurring me on through difficult patches.
Contents

Abstract iii

Acknowledgements iv

List of Illustrations vii

List of Musical Examples viii

Introduction 1

1. “The ear was more gratified than the eye”: Problems Surrounding Women and the Violin 7
   Performing, Displaying, and the Male Gaze 7
   Class and Gender Associations of the Violin and Its Repertoires 13
   Idealisation of Stillness in Women Musical’s Performance 16
   Physical Movement and the Violin 20

2. “Much delicacy of finger”: Conditions which Enabled (Some) Women to Play the Violin 23
   Familial Support and Access to Education 24
   Patronage and Employment 27
   Emulating Men 30
   Convents and the Venetian ospedali 35

3. Gender and Gesture in Late Eighteenth-Century Women’s Violin Performance: Regina Strinasacchi’s Violin Concerto in B flat major 43
   Analytical Frameworks
      Gender and Gesture 47
      Musical Features for Analysis 50
      Virtuosity 51
      Topics 53
      Structure 54
      Soloist/Orchestra Interaction 56
   Analysis of Strinasacchi’s Concerto
      I. Allegro Moderato 57
      II. Adagio 68
      III. Rondo Affectuoso 75
List of Illustrations

Figure 1. Hauk, Silhouette of Regina Strinasacchi, 1795 (Klassik Stiftung Weimar, Schloss Tiefurt, Weimar) i

Figure 2. Josepha Marti-Zbinden, early nineteenth century (in François de Capitani and Gerhard Aeschbacher, Musik in Bern: Musik, Musiker, Musikerinnen und Publikum in der Stadt Bern vom Mittelalter bis heute (Bern: Historischer Vereins des Kantons Bern, 1993), 182.) 33

Figure 3. Giovanni Grevenbroch, Orfane filarmoniche, 1754 (in Gli abiti de Veneziani di quasi ogni età, Biblioteca Correr, Venice) 37
List of Musical Examples

I. Allegro Moderato

Example 1.1 Exposition 60
Example 1.2 Recapitulation 61
Example 1.3 Vertiginous leaps 65
Example 1.4 Vulgar grand cadence 1 66
Example 1.5 Vulgar grand cadence 2 66

II. Adagio

Example 2.1 Adagio introduction 70
Example 2.2 Zefiro topic 71
Example 2.3 Vocal-influenced melody 74

III. Rondo Affectuoso

Example 3.1 Refrain 79
Example 3.2 Minore section opening 81
Example 3.3 End of minore section 82
Example 3.4 High points of the Rondo 83