

Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.

Intercultural Conflicts Between New Zealanders and Japanese under Business Conditions

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts in Japanese at Massey University

Yuko Oshika

2001

ABSTRACT

Cultural diversity includes many different values and behaviours. This frequently causes intercultural conflicts and communication break-downs. If people do not know these differences, they cannot know the reasons for these communication failures. People who communicate with others from different cultural groups, therefore, have to be aware of the different cultural values and communication rules these target cultural groups have.

When New Zealanders work with the Japanese people, what are the factors to prevent communication? This dissertation aims to answer this question. An interview survey was held in order to analyse successful cases and unsuccessful cases of intercultural communication between New Zealanders and Japanese under work conditions. The Japanese managers and employees were interviewed to investigate what intercultural aspects these New Zealanders have to be aware of. The research results show that ; (1) different styles of work, (2) senses of responsibility - individual responsibility / group responsibility -, and (3) different ways of apologising frequently cause problems. All of these three aspects are related to the individualism-collectivism dimension of culture. These results indicate that this conceptual difference, individualism-collectivism, is the biggest cultural dimension which causes intercultural conflicts as a number of researchers argue. This aspect, therefore, has to be taught in Japanese language courses or job training courses to avoid these frequent conflicts and failures of intercultural communication between New Zealanders and Japanese.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to Dr Fumio Kakubayashi, my supervisor for this dissertation. Dr. Kakubayashi introduced me to several useful resources and warned me sometimes when I was losing focus. It was his insight, advice and encouragement that carried me through to its completion. As a part-time and distance student with a full-time job, I cannot thank Dr Kakubayashi enough for teaching me, especially during holidays through emails.

I would also like to extend my appreciation to the research participants who kindly took time to be interviewed. These interviewees' reports were filled with great ideas. It was a pleasure for me to meet teams of New Zealanders and Japanese collaborating successfully.

Many thanks also to the people at my work. My students inspired my interest in this field of study. Their speeches, essays and talks about their work experiences gave me many ideas. My colleagues always supported me in a friendly way. They knew what support I needed and cheered me up when I had a hard time.

I am also indebted to Mrs Kazuko Ishibashi who enlisted the help of her students in gathering useful resources for me.

I am also grateful for the tremendous amount of time and energy of Moana Cook and Geoff Sheehan who read my manuscript. Discussions with Moana cleared many of the New Zealanders' point of view. Geoff gave me many questions to make the focuses of arguments clear. These capable and kind friends are treasures of mine.

Last but not least, I want to thank my only family member, Sana for her patience and warmth throughout the years of working on this dissertation. I hope this paper can help her when she has a confusion with her cultural identity as a second generation Japanese New Zealander.

CONTENTS

ABSTRACT	ii
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	iii
CONTENTS	iv
INTRODUCTION	1
CHAPTER 1. FEATURES OF JAPANESE CULTURE	5
1.1 Hofstede's research	9
1.2 Masculinity - Strong sex roles	10
1.3 Power distance between superiors and subordinates	11
- Hierarchical structure of groups
1.4 Uncertainty avoidance - Japanese management	15
1.5 Collectivism	16
1.5.1 Strong solidarity and loyalty	18
1.5.2 Inter-dependence and homogeneity	20
1.5.3 Restriction of self-expressions	21
1.5.4 Conflict avoidance tendency	24
1.5.5 Group responsibility	26
1.5.6 Apologies	28
1.6 Work ethics	31
1.7 An example of intercultural conflict	32
1.8 Contemporary Japanese society	34
1.9 Summary	36
CHAPTER 2. FEATURES OF INTERCULTURAL COMMUNICATION	40
2.1 Language barrier	40
2.2 Inter-language / language reduction	41
2.3 Cultural shock	43
2.4 Three stages of the adjustment process to a different culture	43
2.5 Host - newcomer relationship	45
2.6 Stereotypes and prejudices	46
2.7 Summary	49

CHAPTER 3. RESEARCH RESULTS	53
3.1 Nature of research	53
3.1.1 Objective	53
3.1.2 Method and participants	53
3.2 Reports from interviewees	54
3.2.1 Power distance - Superior / subordinate relationship	54
3.2.2 Uncertainty avoidance - Japanese management	57
3.2.3 Collectivism	59
3.2.3.1 Style of work	59
3.2.3.2 Expressing oneself	60
3.2.3.3 Group responsibility	64
3.2.3.4 Apologies	66
3.2.4 Work ethics	67
3.2.5 Language barrier	72
3.2.6 Three different stages of the adjustment process	73
3.2.7 Prejudice	75
3.2.8 Others	77
CHAPTER 4. CONCLUSION	82
4.1 Research findings	82
4.2 Perspective of further research	83
4.3 Competence to succeed in intercultural communication	84
REFERENCES	88