Thanks are due to a range of people who found time in their busy lives to help me complete this project.

My first thanks go to Dr. Robert Ayson, my Chief Supervisor. Robert's advice was always prompt and helpful (a point I often acknowledged in retrospect rather than when the advice was first offered). Robert has always been ready and willing to trudge through a draft and let me know whether it was "useful" or (occasionally and in small measures) "very useful".

I also wish to acknowledge the assistance of Dr. Joel Hayward and Dr. James Watson. Joel has my thanks for his unlimited enthusiasm and for his confidence in me. James has my thanks for his sage advice and kind words.

I also offer my thanks to my family and my partner Shelley. In addition to the moral and material support, these people reminded me that there are more things in life to fill one's waking hours with than research.
