Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.
Achieving a place: A communography of disabled postgraduates

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy In Social Anthropology

At Massey University, Albany Campus, New Zealand

Michael John McCool

2009
This study is social anthropological insider research of disabled postgraduates, students and staff in tertiary educational institutions.

This is also a study of enabling conditions for inclusion; and ways the participants build relationships between themselves and the wider community.

I consider my participants as kin. This was a joint venture - we were related not by blood, but by the very fact that we share in communities of disabled people. We are connected even if not always interacting with each other; we seldom moved in the same circles on a day-to-day basis.

These are stories of adversity, where the participants have developed successful coping strategies and made achievements, not despite their being “othered”, but by living with and acknowledging their differences. These are reflections on our society where we compete in complex emotional relationships within employment and all other social institutions. The university seemed to be a psychologically safer setting probably because it is a place for higher learning and therefore all the people had a more highly developed consciousness. Even though in some cases there were some wider macro barriers, on the whole, the participants’ experience was positive.

We found what we as joint participants shared in that feeling of disability was just the same as the feeling of communitas as students. Thinking about communitas (Turner, 1967), the Latin for community, convinced me that community was the central theme of this whole thesis. There are communities of practice in all organisations and institutions in society and they are used by the participants in this study not only in developing strategies for inclusion, but also for learning. Because the university is a series of communities of practice a major theorist for this study is Vygotsky and his concept of a culture of learning. We are also indebted to the social anthropologist Lave and her colleagues for bringing his ideas to Western academia.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

To the participants in the study, thank you.

Especially to my principal supervisor Dr Eleanor Rimoldi, thank you for your infinite patience and compassion. You have been my inspiration.

To Dr Graeme MacRae for taking over as my second supervisor and offering such great counsel and advice.

To my friends Dr Ken Ryba, friend, mentor and early supervisor, Professor Emeritus Dr Dan MacKerracher, Linda Young, Andrew Weatherly for their insightful help.

To Jo Wilkins and the support staff at Massey University Albany. Also for the Massey University Disabilities Hardship Grant.

To Lakeisha Cheng for reinstalling the passion and the will.

Conduct for this research using human participants had the approval of the Massey University Albany Ethics Committee ... MUAHEC 02/074
DEDICATION

This research is really dedicated to my parents; my Dad who passed away at the beginning of the study and my Mum towards the end. It was such a shame, I never saw myself as a sufferer, but I could always see my pain in your eyes.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

ABSTRACT ................................................................................................................ ii
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS ............................................................................................ iv
DEDICATION ............................................................................................................... v
TABLE OF CONTENTS ............................................................................................. vi

CHAPTER ONE - INTRODUCTION ........................................................................ 1
Cognition, the self and anthropology ................................................................. 1
What prompted the research? ........................................................................... 5
Aims of the research .......................................................................................... 9
Presentation of the thesis .................................................................................... 10
Consideration of research questions in communography ............................ 12
Disclosure experiences ..................................................................................... 13
Segregation and exclusion issues ..................................................................... 13
Social and economic issues ............................................................................. 14
Adaptive behaviours for acceptance and survival ......................................... 14
Human Rights and conceptual issues ............................................................... 14
Personal adjustment/psychological factors ..................................................... 15
An explicit description of the research method and an outline of the thesis. 15
Field work ........................................................................................................... 16

CHAPTER TWO – DISABILITY ......................................................................... 18
Traditional society, health and disability ....................................................... 19
Religious influences ........................................................................................ 26
Science, technology and medicine ................................................................. 29
Disability consciousness and the Social Model ............................................. 34
The word disability ........................................................................................... 39
Confusion and controversy ............................................................................. 42
Disability summarized ..................................................................................... 44
CHAPTER THREE - PARTICIPANTS

Introducing the participants

Rationale to the vignettes

Angela

Arthur

Daphne

Fran

Joan

Josh

Karla

Kathy

Lesley

Lynette

Marg

Marina

Melanie

Roger

Ross

Shaun

Terry

Wayne

CHAPTER FOUR – THE RESEARCH JOURNEY

Introduction

Beginning the journey

Developing some theoretical perspective

Participating in the research culture

The meaning of culture

Insider research
Process of the research ................................................................. 110

CHAPTER FIVE - EXCLUSION................................................................. 128

CHAPTER SIX - CONCLUSION............................................................... 153
To summarise this thesis ................................................................. 162

APPENDICES......................................................................................... 165
APPENDIX A - INTERVIEW THEMES....................................................... 165
APPENDIX B – INFORMATION SHEET ................................................... 166
APPENDIX C – CONSENT FORM ............................................................. 168
APPENDIX D - LETTER TO PARTICIPANTS ........................................... 169
APPENDIX E - CULTURAL IDENTITY DEVELOPMENT THEORY ............ 171

AUTHOR NOTE ...................................................................................... 172

BIBLIOGRAPHY...................................................................................... 173